Japan's Fence At Tientsin Electrocutes First Victim

Body Left Dangling In View of Inspection Station; British Charge Fresh Insults

Death at a Barricade

By the United Press.

Tientsin, Friday, June 23.—The electrified wire barricade set up by the apanese around the British and French Concession today had claimed its first victim—a Chinese.

The man, dressed as a coolie, apparently received a deadly jolt of electricity sometime in the night while attempting to leave the concession.

At mid-morning the body still hung grotesquely on the wire, a few hundred yards from the U. S. Marine Barracks. The legs were sprawled inside the barricade. The victim's hat lay outside it.

First Proof of Electrification

Hundreds of Chinese standing in line at the Shansi road barrier awaiting inspection by Japanese sentries and Chinese policemen could see the body.

[The British consulate-general charged Japanese gendarmes with heaping fresh indignities and insults on British seeking to pass the barriers of the blockaded British and French concessions. He protested against a Japanese attempt to search British lighters tied up in the Hai River along the British Bund, according to the Associated Press.

[The consulate-general issued a statement charging that eight Britons had been forced to submit to indignities, including stripping and lengthy examinations in full view of Chinese coolies and women, as they sought to cross the barriers.

Visa Crammed Into Mouth

[It said H. J. Lord, assistant secretary of the Tientsin Race Club, had his passport thrust into his mouth by a Japanese gendarme after he and a companion were compelled to strip completely.]

The Japanese announced the establishment of an electrified barrier on Monday, saying it would be charged with 220 volts and was intended to prevent anyone from sneaking into or out of the British and French concessions. Two hundred twenty volts is sufficient to kill when there is high amperage.

It was the first proof that the wires around the concessions actually had been electrified. As late as yesterday French police said they did not know definitely whether the Japanese really had followed up their announcement by actually sending current through the strands.

Japan Defied at Swatow

Shanghai, June 22.—The United States and Great Britain doubled their naval forces today in the Japanese-occupied South China port of Swatow in the face of a belated warning to the warships and nationals of both to leave a zone of possible hostilities.

Russia Rejects Latest British Alliance Plan

Moscow, June 22 (AP).—The Soviet government gave its formal reply to the latest British-French mutual assistance pact proposals today after the foreign office publicly had described them as unsatisfactory.

The reply was not disclosed, but its nature was indicated in a foreign office bulletin to the effect that the latest proposal not only did "not represent any improvement over the previous proposals," but were not even new.

The reply was handed by Premier-Foreign Commissar Vyacheslaff Molotoff to the British and French ambassadors, Sir William Seeds and Paul Emile Naggiar, and William Strang, special British envoy.

Special Cable to The Post.

London, June 22.—Like sovereigns of old returning from a major victory abroad, King George VI and his smiling Queen Elizabeth, once again set foot on the soil of England today to receive a "well done!" from the throats of hundreds of thousands of their subjects who jammed the streets of London and Southampton to roar in welcome and shouting gratitude for the success of the royal visit to Canada and the United States.

"We had this kind of thing all the way, but this is different," said the King as he stepped from the gangplank of the Canadian Pacific liner Empress of Britain at Southampton at 3:23 o'clock this afternoon. Looking tired, but bronzed and fit, His Majesty grinned with pleasure at seeing familiar faces once more. Then he stopped to salute as the naval band struck up "God Save the King."

In the midst of the happy reunion of the royal family on the quay side, Queen Elizabeth turned and exclaimed, "we have had a really wonderful time, but we are very glad to be home once more and with our children."

Crowds 30 and 40 Deep

After a round of hand-shaking while 18 reconnaisance planes of the Royal Air Force roared overhead through a murky sky, and harbor craft set up a din, with shrieking whistles, Their Majesties were swept up to a civic welcome in the center of the town, which was repeated two hours later in London on an enormous scale, as four spanking Windsor greys hauled them in an open maroon carriage at the head of a glittering cavalcade over two miles of sanded flag-decked streets from Waterloo Station to Buckingham Palace.

Crowds 30 and 40 deep cheered the King and Queen along the processional routine with a burst of late afternoon sunshine adding luster to the scene. As the royal carriage passed through the gates of the palace at 5:58 p. m. the royal standard was broken out from the flagstaff

7 Collapse In Humid Heat, Boy Drowned

Rain Brings Relief; Swimmer Rescued In Boys' Club Pool

Heavy rain, blown into Washington on a thunderstorm, last night ended a day of searing heat and high humidity which saw one boy drowned, another saved from drowning and seven persons prostrated.

Heat which reached a peak of 88 at 3:50 p. m. was driven down 12 degrees in two hours by last night's rain, from 80 at 8 p. m. to 68 at 10 p. m. Local showers and partly cloudy skies were predicted for today, with cooler temperatures tonight.

Leonard Martin, colored, 18, of 2413 I street northwest, was drowned when he went swimming in the Potomac a mile above Key Bridge with a party of friends to escape the heat.

John McSorley, 13, of 1512 A street northeast, who joined the Southeast Washington Boys Club yesterday to learn to swim, was dragged unconscious from the club pool last night by Richard Burchette, assistant swimming instructor. Burchette applied artificial respiration until a fire rescue squad revived him with a pulmotor. He was taken to Casualty Hospital for observation.

At the highest temperature, the Weather Bureau said the humidity was 57 per cent, which was above normal even for July and about 12 points more than that expected in June.

Floyd Jones, 17, of 1241 G street northwest, was treated at Casualty Hospital for heat prostration.

Horace Walker, 34, of 1100 Sixth street northwest, was taken to the Public Health Service Clinic when he was overcome by heat.

Ella Williams, colored, 34, of no known address, received treatment for heat exhaustion at Casualty.

Percy Miner, 67, of 223 Webster street northwest, was overcome by the heat while working at the Experimental Farm in Arlington.

Clinton E. Sale, 32, of 124 North Carolina avenue southeast, was treated for heat exhaustion at Casualty Hospital. Anderson Stewart, colored, 34, of 2223 F street northwest, and Robert Shorter, colored, 36, of 1116 P street northwest, were treated at Emergency Hospital.

Meanwhile, hundreds of Washington school children sought relief from the heat on the first day of the summer vacation in the 14 wading pools, which opened for the first time yesterday, and in the local swimming pools.

Cattle Rustlin'? Whitney Estate Like Old West

Special Dispatch to The Post

Leesburg, Va., June 22.—A tale of cattle rustling was brought to light today with the arrest of Gilbert Tumblin, 28, who is charged with stealing cows and heifers, valued at $1,000, from the Llangollen estate of Mrs. John Hay Whitney at Upperville.

Tumblin, who is employed at the Whitney estate, is in the Leesburg jail. Authorities state that the thefts were reported as having extended over a period of time and that the cattle were sold on the market.

Lorton Frees Man Forced to Violate Parole

James Donovan Out Again; Was Victim of Indiana Vigilantes

James F. Donovan, whose parole was revoked after a group of vigilantes of Flora, Ind., had told him to get out of town "or else," yesterday was granted freedom from Lorton Reformatory conditioned on a satisfactory parole plan.

The revocation occurred in February, 1935, after Donovan had been released in November of the previous year. At the time he was paroled it was with the understanding he would go to a chicken farm in Indiana, where a position had been obtained for him. He had served a little more than two years of a ten-year robbery sentence.

Told to Leave Town

He worked there until fellow townsmen learned of his presence. On Christmas Eve, in 1934, Donovan was called from a church where he was attending services and was told to get out of town on pain of drastic punishment.

He notified his parole officer and was taken to South Bend, Ind., under the parole officer's guidance. At that time, even though the attache of the parole board was acquiescent in the change of scenery, the parole board, unable to work out another "suitable parole plan," ordered him back to prison.

Following his return to this city Donovan applied for a writ of habeas corpus, stating he was technically forced to violate the terms of his parole. His request was rejected and since then he has been at Lorton.

In granting him his freedom at this time the board said he would have been released on January 27 of this year if he had not been paroled in 1934.

Rob Delicatessen

Donovan was arrested on January 22, 1932. Edward G. Dougan, a taxicab driver, said Donovan and another man had entered his cab and driven to Twenty-third and N streets northeast, where they robbed a delicatessen store of $30.

Re-entering his cab, Dougan said, the men pressed a pistol against him to emphasize their commands. As he sighted a policeman he shouted and stopped his cab. Policeman W. E. Scott, of the Third Precinct, chased and caught Donovan. His companion was caught later and convicted of robbery.

Bund Chieftain Loses Citizenship

Los Angeles, June 22 (AP).—Citizenship of Herman Max Schwinn, West Coast director of the German-American Bund, was canceled today by Federal Judge Ralph E. Jenney.

Schwinn has three months in which to appeal the ruling. At the end of that time, unless he obtains a reversal, he will be subject to deportation.

The bund officer admitted, at a hearing, that in his application for citizenship he swore he had been a resident of California since 1926, whereas he was in Akron, Ohio, until 1927.

"I did not realize my mistake until six months ago when immigration authorities questioned me about it."

Moore, State Dept. Counselor, At 80, Hops Atlantic Tomorrow

By the Associated Press.

R. Walton Moore, 80-year-old counselor of the State Department, will fly to Europe from New York tomorrow on a clipper plane.

R. W. MOORE

The Virginia statesman, who spent many years in Congress and has been in the State Department for six years with a present rank equivalent to that of Undersecretary of State, said yesterday he was looking forward with great eagerness to the flight.

Moore, known to his friends as "Judge," will fly to Southampton, England, and then to London.

He has just received an invitation from Ambassador Bullitt in Paris to fly there for a large dinner June 27.

Moore expects to be back in Washington by the end of the month, remaining only three days in Europe. He is acting as liaison officer for the State Department with Congress in the discussions going on for new neutrality legislation.

Judge Moore served in Congress from 1919 to 1930. He was active in work of the Foreign Affairs Committee.

In 1933 he was appointed Assistant Secretary of State

House Votes Farm Parity In WPA Deal

Urban Backing Traded for Promised Aid to Liberalize Relief Regulations

Moving toward final approval of the largest agricultural appropriation bill in history, the House yesterday indorsed Senate amendments providing an unbudgeted $338,000,000 for parity payments and disposal of surplus commodities.

The $1,180,000,000 measure now goes back to conference, as the House refused to accept other Senate increases, including $250,000 for the first unit of a new weather bureau building in Washington.

Overriding economy champions headed by Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, a coalition of farm and New York City representatives barely succeeded, by a vote of 180 to 175, in retaining the Senate grant of $225,000,000 for parity payments to farmers.

New York Swings Vote

A last-minute swing of 10 or 11 New York City votes, together with a few from Chicago and other cities, clinched the farmers' victory in a deal whereby the farm representatives are now expected to approve more liberal regulations governing the WPA.

By their vote for parity payments, several of the urban members hoped to win agricultural votes to their side in attacking provisions of the relief bill earmarking $125,000,000 of WPA funds for PWA and limiting Federal contributions to locally sponsored construction projects to $40,000. The relief measure is now in Senate committee, but will almost certainly be amended so that a conference with the House seems assured.

The $113,000,000 apropriation for disposal of surplus commodities was approved by a 143-100 vote of the House, with an amendment providing that at least half the sums allotted to cotton must be spent on domestic consumption. The net effect is to limit the total amount available for subsidizing cotton exports to about $38,300,000, contrasted with the $60,000,000 the President has declared to be necessary.

Use of Funds Restricted

Leading the battle against the unbudgeted appropriations, Representative Woodrum warned the House that "the President doesn't want this parity, and I don't see how he can sign the bill with parity in it." He pointed out that the President opposed parity payments unless new taxes were levied to offset the expenditure.

However, Representative Johnson (Democrat), of Oklahoma, jumped up to declare that "a committee of Congress" called on the President and was "given assurance that this bill would not be vetoed."

Under the bill the $225,000,000 parity payments are limited to producers of wheat, cotton, corn, rice and tobacco. The section relating to disposal of surplus commodities provides that not more than 25 per cent of the $113,000,000 granted can be used for any one commodity.

The House downed a Senate pro-

Mrs. Rubens Fears Spy Husband Is Dead in Russia

Moscow, June 22 (U.P.).—Mrs. Ruth Marie Rubens, who served 18 months in a Soviet prison in the sensational "Robinson-Rubens" passport fraud and espionage case, said tonight that she fears her long-missing husband may be dead because he was an anti-Soviet spy.

Mrs. Rubens told the United Press that she has been granted a six-month permit to remain in the Soviet Union and will spend the time trying to trace her husband's disappearance.

Her husband, known to her as Adolph Arnold Rubens but identified on his passport as "Donald Louis Robinson," was taken from his room in the National Hotel by Russian secret police on December 2, 1937. Eight days later, Mrs. Rubens disappeared in the same mysterious manner.

James Roosevelt 'Swell' at Mayos'

Rochester, Minn., June 22 (AP).—James Roosevelt, the President's son, said today, "I'm feeling swell," and Mayo Clinic physicians declared he had progressed even more than expected since his gastric ulcer operation last September.

A physician who completed a routine checkup today said young Roosevelt was in "excellent health" and declared, "the results of the operation have exceeded our most optimistic expectations." He said young Roosevelt had gained 12½ pounds.

Senate Passes Corporate Tax Revision

La Follette Proposal To Broaden Base Of Income Levies Meets Defeat

By Robert C. Albright

Rejecting proposals to broaden the income tax base and increase middle bracket surtaxes, the Senate yesterday, without a record vote, approved the $1,644,000,000 corporate tax revision bill.

Passed at high speed to beat the June 30 deadline on expiring nuisance taxes, the measure was returned to the House with only minor changes.

Chairman Doughton, of the House Ways and Means Committee, said he was satisfied with the Senate version, and would not ask the usual two-chamber conference. He may call up Senate amendments today for final House action.

Profits Tax Killed

Although a score of minor amendments were added by the Senate, Doughton said they did not materially affect either the revenue yields or the bill's prime objective to remove "irritant" taxes.

Unaltered were key provisions killing the 2½ per cent undivided profits tax and substituting a flat 18 per cent corporate tax on firms earning more than $25,000 a year.

Small corporations earning less than $25,000 would continue to be taxed at graduated rates ranging from 12½ to 16 per cent. A two-year loss carry-over much sought by business was included, and corporations were authorized to increase their capital stock valuations for 1939 and 1940, as an offset to excess profits taxation.

It was Senator La Follette (Progressive), Wisconsin, who came within a hair's breadth of opening up the bill to individual income tax revision with amendments increasing middle-bracket surtaxes and lowering exemptions.

Amendment Shouted Down

With victory in sight on a proposal to start surtaxes on incomes over $3,000 and progressively raise them up to the $50,000 level, La Follette saw a two-vote margin of approval changed to a tie-vote rejection as Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, switched his ballot.

As the Senate rolled up a majority for the amendment, Finance Committee Chairman Harrison demanded a recapitulation. Over La Follette's objection, the roll was again read, while Democratic bill managers maneuvered for the needed switch. Tydings at last changed his vote to "no", and the amendment lost by a 38 to 38 tie. Vice President Garner could have broken the tie, but he failed to.

With that vote, LaFollette's five-year fight to "equalize" the tax structure, recently supported by the President, was over, but he pressed a second amendment to lower income tax exemptions of single persons from $1,000 to $800 and reduce the married couple tax credit from $2,500 to $2,000. This was shouted down without a record vote. It

Lady Astor Backs Tobacco Tax Rise Though Virginian

London, June 22 (AP).—Lady Astor, who hails from Virginia, whence comes much of Britain's tobacco, today supported a higher duty on tobacco, asserting that "smoking is almost one of the crimes of the age."

"Is that not strange talk from a Virginian?" asked Brendan Bracken, Conservative member of the House of Commons.

Lady Astor replied:

"When I was in Virginia hardly anyone smoked a cigarette and the Bishop of Virginia, coming to see me, said he would rather see his daughter drunk than smoking a cigarette."

CAROL MAURICE

Showgirl Tells Of Buckner's Marriage Ideas

Invitation to Manila Wasn't a Proposal, Prosecutor Informed

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 22.—With the testimony of a pert Broadway showgirl and that of a wholly serious Federal investigator the prosecution presented today two more facets of its mail fraud case against William P. Buckner, jr., and his four accused co-conspirators in the alleged manipulation of Philippine Railway bonds.

Then, late in the day, the Government rested provisionally, reserving the right to call tomorrow one more witness, expected to arrive on the storm-delayed liner Manhattan. That witness, it was understood, is William F. Ingold, a London broker.

Through Carol Maurice, a young woman in a candy-striped dress, a silver fox cape and a blue sailor hat, Assistant United States Attorney William Power Maloney sought to show that Buckner had spent in the city's hot spots at least some of the money which he had collected from fellow holders of the defaulted Philippine bonds as chairman of their protective committee.

Night Club Visits Related

Miss Maurice told of having made the rounds of sundry night clubs with Buckner and others and testified that in 1937 the young promoter had invited her to go along with him to Manila on a business trip.

"Was that an elopement?" asked Maloney.

"Oh, no," said the witness. "He often talked of marriage, but only like you'd talk about the war in China.

"He had the modern idea about marriage—he wanted to marry a rich woman."

Cross-examination for the defense, John Minton inquired:

"It's not uncommon for a gentleman to ask a lady to take a trip, is it?"

"Oh, Mr. Minton!" said Miss Maurice, flushing and lowering her shadowed eyelids.

Audience, counsel and judge laughed, and Maloney broke in:

"I don't know where Mr. Minton comes from; that must be the new technique."

"At any rate," said Minton, chuckling, "I was young once."

Telling of her trips to night clubs with Buckner; William Gillespie, another defendant; Doris (Pee Wee) Donaldson and Noel Carter, also show girls, Miss Maurice testified

Plans of Prison to Supplant Alcatraz Are Before Murphy

Early abandonment of Alcatraz in favor of a new and more adaptable Federal prison in some isolated part of the country was foreseen yesterday as Attorney General Murphy revealed plans for the proposed structure were already on his desk.

On a visit to the 12-acre rock early this month the Attorney General described Alcatraz as a "place of horror" and the system under which it is run as "necessarily vicious."

The surprise which greeted this attack on one of the pet projects of former Attorney General Cummings was weak beside that aroused yesterday by revelation of the fact that within less than a half month Murphy has been able to secure a complete report on substitute possibilities—plus designs for a new prison.

It is probable, he indicated, that Congress will be asked to pass on the plans at this session.

No location for the "new Alcatraz" has been decided upon, the Attorney General said. As to the fate of Alcatraz, Murphy pointed out that the structure there might conceivably be used for hospital purposes.

"Nevertheless," he declared, "It would be good if some symbol of freedom could be erected on the island to greet incomers, like the Statue of Liberty."

Mr. Roosevelt's Request

By Felix Cotten.

President Roosevelt yesterday launched another major offensive against the depression when he tossed into the laps of a vacation-minded Congress a $3,860,000,000 lending program which would not show up in the budget or public debt.

The program encountered immediate opposition from Democratic conservatives, who felt that it would prove merely another outpouring of Government money, although it would be limited to "self-liquidating" projects and would not involve "spending" along with "lending."

Republicans were inclined to stress the political implications of the plan. They saw in it the machinery for a bitterly contested 1940 Presidential campaign, with prospects even greater than before that the President will seek a third term.

Leaders Harried

Democratic leaders, who must handle the necessary legislation, received the program with harried looks and a glance at the calendar.

There was some suggestion of an effort to attach the legislation to the relief bill, now pending in the Senate, but the feeling was that the time is too short, since the bill must be passed by June 30.

The President outlined the plan in a letter to Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, who had written asking for his reaction to the proposal to "earmark" $125,000,000 of the new work relief money for loans and grants by the Public Works Administration.

He opposed the earmarking of money for the PWA. Instead, he recommended a $3,060,000,000 lending program for "self-liquidating projects," and the adoption of pending legislation to increase the borrowing power of the United States Housing Authority by $800,000,000. The latter, he declared, would be to provide housing for families in intermediate salary brackets between $1,250 and $2,000.

Would Guarantee Loans

Money for the self-liquidating loans would be borrowed by Government lending agencies in the open markets, just as various lending agencies have borrowed money in the past.

The President emphasized that the lending program, which would run for seven years, would not cost the Government any money. But the Government would guarantee repayment of the money borrowed by the agencies.

Loans would be at the lowest possible interest rates.

Highlights of Program

Highlights of the program follow:

The PWA loan and grant policy would be discontinued (although Secretary of the Interior Ickes is urging Congress to provide an additional $500,000,000 to carry it on) and the new Federal works agency would be authorized to lend $350,000,000 over a two-year period for "self-financing" projects of the type which the PWA has been sponsoring.

Long and short-term loans totaling $500,000,000 would be made

A SENATOR EXPLAINS NEUTRALITY TO HIS SON

SON: Who'll have to fight if we choose the wrong kind of neutrality?

DAD: You will. So I'd better explain it to you simply.

SON: Why are there so many plans?

* * * *

DAD: Because a few amateur statesmen think they're smarter than the State Department.

SON: Which bill do you favor? They mean well, don't they?

U&U

Cordell Hull

. . . peace bill

SON: But what's wrong with an embargo against selling to either side in a war?

DAD: Because that's exactly what the dictator warlords want us to do. Such an embargo is the same as giving Hitler 500 new submarines.

SON: How would Hitler vote on our neutrality bills?

"—to keep us out of war"

DAD: He'd vote against Secretary Hull's peace-neutrality bill, and cheer for embargo. Then he could go to war tomorrow, with the world at his mercy.

SON: But why do you call Mr. Hull's bill a peace bill, if it would make Hitler mad?

DAD: It might make him mad, but it would discourage him from fighting, because the peaceful nations would be in better position to defend themselves.

SON: But why do some Senators favor a "neutrality bill" that would bring on a war?

DAD: Because they think we can stay out of the next world war—wishing will make it so. We might move off the planet.

SON: Then what do you think is the best way for us to stay out of the next war?

DAD: By doing all we can—and that's plenty—to prevent the next war.

SON: How can the embargo be neutral if it would bring on a war quickly?

DAD: It's about as neutral as sinking half of England's fleet or destroying half of the French air force.

SON: But a lot of splendid people seem to believe in such a bill.

DAD: Yes, and a lot of splendid people believe in prohibition and the Townsend plan and $30 every Thursday.

SON: But just what does the Hull neutrality-for-peace bill do?

DAD: It lets our own Government decide where Americans can travel or trade, instead of letting the dictators decide that.

SON: But wouldn't it be dangerous to give that power to any President?

DAD: I think any President and State Department would be just as anxious to prevent war and keep out of it, and just as patriotic, as Congress. The "frozen neutrality" bills would let the dictators fix our foreign policy.

"—which one shall he shoot?"

SON: But who is supposed to conduct our foreign affairs under the Constitution?

DAD: The Constitution puts the President in charge of our foreign relations. But he cannot get into a war or even make a treaty without the consent of Congress.

SON: Is Congress trying to take the President's constitutional power away?

DAD: It looks that way; and it's as bad for Congress to encroach on the power of the Executive as for the President to encroach on the Supreme Court.

SON: Do you think there will be a world war this year?

DAD: Every move we make on Capitol Hill is being watched. If we don't repeal the embargo, and if we defeat the Hull proposals, it would be a signal for the aggressors to attack.

SON: We tried to be neutral in 1914, didn't we? But we couldn't stay out.

DAD: If England can't count on our help, and if Hitler can't count on our isolation, there won't be any war.

SON: Maybe we could keep out of the next war by resigning from the human race . . . But we can't do that by passing a law, can we?

Senate Confirms Olds for Power Commission Vacancy Created by Transfer of McNinch

The Presidential nomination of Leland Olds, of New York, to be a member of the Federal Power Commission yesterday was confirmed by the Senate. He takes the place left open by transfer of Frank R. McNinch to the Federal Communications Commission.

LELAND OLDS

Olds has been serving as executive secretary of the New York power authority.

The Supreme Court Building, including its elaborate furnishings, cost $9,646,467.98 and there is an unused balance of $93,532.02, David Lynn, architect of the Capitol, reported to Congress.

Citing that the building is now completed, Lynn recommended the commission set up by Congress during the Hoover Administration to supervise construction of the marble building be dissolved since its duties were ended.

Senator Lucas (Democrat), Illinois, told the Senate Agriculture Committee yesterday that Government officials had intimidated farmers and landowners in Illinois in acquiring land along the Illinois River for a dam near Alton, Ill.

"I know many small farmers who signed on the dotted line because they could not afford to battle the great Federal Government through the courts on condemnation," the Senator said.

Lucas made these assertions in questioning TVA representatives who appeared in opposition to a bill by Senators Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, and Donahey (Democrat), Ohio, proposing that the Tennessee Valley Authority reimburse small landowners whose properties were encircled by waters from the Pickwick Dam of TVA.

Senator Carter Glass, of Virginia, was the recipient of a huge basket of flowers delivered—indirectly—from beauteous Tallulah Bankhead, stage star and daughter of Speaker Bankhead.

Glass, who is confined to bed with a cold, was sent the flowers by members of the Senate Appropriations Committee, of which he is chairman, after the committee was presented with the floral offering by Miss Bankhead at the close of her plea Wednesday for funds to continue Federal theater projects.

Presentation of a statue of Commodore John Barry, "the father of the United States Navy," to Ireland, was proposed yesterday by Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts.

A bill by Walsh proposed that the presentation be made by the President of the United States in 1945, on the 200th anniversary of Barry's birth in Ireland.

Roosevelt Gains Slightly Against Dewey in Last Six Weeks; New Yorker Leads With 52%

New York, June 22.—If President Roosevelt were to run for a third term on the Democratic ticket against Thomas E. Dewey, of New York, on the Republican ticket, voting sentiment at this time would be almost evenly divided, with a slight majority for Dewey. However, Roosevelt's strength against Dewey is greater today than it was six weeks ago.

These facts are revealed in a national survey of public opinion, conducted by the American Institute of Public Opinion, in which the two men were matched against each other in a speculative race or "trial heat" to determine President Roosevelt's third term popularity in relation to a specific Republican candidate. Thomas Dewey, the young New York Republican district attorney, was selected because earlier Institute studies have found him to be the most popular choice of rank-and-file Republican voters at the present time for the G. O. P. nomination.

To thousands of voters in both parties, interviewers for the Institute put this question:

"If President Roosevelt runs for a third term on the Democratic ticket against Thomas Dewey on the Republican ticket, which one would you prefer?"

The same question was asked early in May, and the results compare as follows:

	May	Today
Prefer Roosevelt ..	45%	48%
Prefer Dewey	55	52

In the May survey approximately one person in every eight (12 per cent) expressed no opinion and today the no opinion vote is about the same—13 per cent.

The results of the Dewey-Roosevelt "trial heat" are by no means a conclusive indication of what may happen in 1940 if these two men are the candidates. Any speculation on the third term must take many factors into account. First, is the number of Democrats who may oppose a third term on principle, no matter how strong their party loyalty. Second, is the fact that the public's attitude toward a third term and particularly the attitude of Democrats, would undoubtedly be governed to a large extent by the type of candidate nominated by the Republicans and the kind of campaign he wages.

Nor is it possible at this time to measure the effect of unknown factors such as party platforms, convention fights, campaign speeches, radio broadcasts, newsreel appearances and other factors by which the public appraises candidates and parties. The results of today's survey are, therefore, merely a straw in the wind.

They do give some indication, however, of the unity within the Republican Party at the present time. The rank and file of G. O. P. voters are virtually unanimous in backing Dewey against Roosevelt and an analysis of the reasons they give for this support shows that it is to a large extent because of party loyalty.

The vote by parties on the two candidates follows:

	Favor D'wey	Favor R'velt
1936 Roosevelt Voters	26%	74%
1936 Landon Voters..	98	2

It seems clear from the above table that, at the present time, Dewey has the support of nearly all the Landon voters of 1936 and a quarter of the 1936 Roosevelt voters in this speculative race.

Green Suggests Miss Perkins Keep Her Mouth Shut

By the Associated Press.

C. I. O. and A. F. of L. officials said yesterday they did not know what Secretary of Labor Perkins meant Wednesday when she said at Denver:

"A solution has been found for the great obstacle (between the C. I. O. and A. F. of L.), and other snarly little problems, such as who is to be president of what, should not be difficult to solve."

President William Green of the A. F. of L. commented:

Overton Fiscal Formula to Get Senate Go Sign

Revenue Measure to Be Reported; Supply Bill Impasse Reached

By James D. Secrest.

The Senate District Committee yesterday voted to report the revised local revenue bill carrying the Overton formula after rejecting a petition that it reconsider and substitute a personal income tax for the business privilege levy.

The bill will be reported today after a minor amendment exempting transient stored goods from the personal income tax is added, but it will not be called up in the Senate before tomorrow or early next week.

Meanwhile, Senate and House conferees on the 1940 District supply bill held their third parley without reaching an agreement on major controversial items and recessed until Monday with hints from House managers that a continuing resolution may be the solution.

Deadline Middle of Week

Unless an accord is reached by the middle of next week, the continuing resolution extending current appropriations into the next fiscal year will be offered, it was indicated, to prevent the District from starting the new year on July 1 without funds.

Such a contingency would nullify the Senate action of boosting the lump-sum payment from $5,000,000 to $7,750,000 and in increasing appropriations for public school construction and unemployment relief.

The Senate District Committee's vote on the proposal to reconsider its decision rejecting the House-imposed income tax was along the same lines as the previous action. A motion by Chairman King was supported only by Senator Capper (Republican), of Kansas.

Voting against reconsideration were Senators Overton (Democrat), of Louisiana; Hughes (Democrat), of Delaware; Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire; and Holman (Republican), of Oregon.

The petition was presented to Senators King and Capper by a delegation headed by William J. Tucker, of the Federation of Citizens Associations. It claimed to represent 100 organizations with a combined membership of 75,000 District residents.

Privilege Tax Assailed

Labeling the business privilege tax a "disguised sales tax" and a "monstrosity," the petition urged the committee to adopt an income tax with Federal bases along with the Overton fiscal formula and drop the gross receipts tax.

Chairman King pointed out at the conclusion of the meeting that the modified business privilege tax in the Senate bill has no time limitation as have the last two "emergency" revenue acts. If enacted into law, therefore, it will continue in operation until repealed. The present business privilege tax expires automatically on June 30.

Jo V. Morgan, sole member of the Board of Tax Appeals, explained that the revised rates of the business privilege tax are designed to ease the burden on dealers in goods, wares, and merchandise and to increase the tax on professional men.

The tax on the latter class, he pointed out, is 1 per cent of gross receipts or more than twice the present tax of four-tenths of 1 per cent. Even this tax increase, he added, will be far easier on professional groups than would an income levy.

The tax on merchants, as carried in the Senate bill, starts at one-tenth of 1 per cent where the spread between the cost and sale price of merchandise is 5 per cent and jumps one-tenth of 1 per cent for each 5 per cent increase in gross profit to a maximum tax of four-tenths of 1 per cent when the spread exceeds 15 per cent.

Would Boost Utility Levies

Other taxes carried in the revised Senate bill, besides the Overton formula basing the Federal payment on the ratio of United States owned land to the total acreage of the District, are:

Application of the personal property tax on motor vehicles on a pro rata basis so that a person buying a new car in tax-paying periods will have to pay for the proportion of the year remaining.

Unification and a slight increase in utility taxes to obtain an additional $360,000.

Higher levies on inheritances in the larger brackets.

The bill also includes proposed administrative changes in the inheritance and estate tax acts, the organic law of the Board of Tax Appeals, and would authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to advance loans to the District until taxes are collected.

You're Not Hot—Just Think of These Fellows

Post Staff Photos—McCoy.

C. L. Gordon (left), chief molder in Bureau of Standards glass section. Right—Paul Gray and P. N. Gregory (top) repack expansion joint in steam line where temperature is about 175 degrees

When the street temperature keeps rising higher and higher and you feel you're on the verge of galloping decomposition, think of fellows like Paul Gray, P. N. Gregory and C. L. Gordon, and marvel at the immediate relief.

In a speed tour—very speedy, thank you—of two of the Capital's hottest hot spots yesterday, your Paul Pry reporter found Gray and Gregory doing underground patrol duty in 150 degrees temperature and Gordon, at the other end of the city, moulding optical glass in a 2,400-degree "glory hole."

Now, it is somewhat less than accurate to say Gordon was "in" the aforesaid "glory hole," which is the trade name for the stove in which the glass is shaped. He sat fully 2 feet away, with a shield between him and the fire, and the thermometer hanging at his side registered a mere 99, which would practically chill Gray and Gregory.

Those two workers comprised the afternoon shift on tunnel inspection at the central heating plant. No shield for them. Back and forth they walked, past 3½ miles of subterranean steam lines linking the plant with 77 Government buildings, ever on the lookout for breakdowns.

Average temperature in the labyrinth is 135 degrees. "Cool" spots are where the readings are 120 to 130. Normal temperatures at most of the intersections is 155 to 165.

The other day Gray, who is assistant chief steamfitter, had to work in 280 degrees for several minutes while he repaired a steam leak.

"That was hot even for me," he admitted yesterday.

The tunnel patrolmen always work in pairs on their eight-hour tricks. If one keels over, there's someone to haul him out. Prostrations are not common, but they happen occasionally. All of the men take salt tablets, standard procedure for persons working in abnormal heat.

It was out at the Bureau of Standards that Gordon, chief moulder in the glass section, was found fashioning ingots of glass which are on their way to becoming lenses, mirrors, prisms, etc., for the Navy's optical instruments.

On a stool he sat in front of the "glory hole," so-called because the heat is said to produce a halo-like thing over the oven, and "cooked" a large piece of glass which was fixed on the end of a 5-foot rod, weenie-toasting style.

"The heat's not bad at all today," he said. "That's because none of the arches (glass-making stoves) in the room are going this afternoon. When they're all fired and the two glory holes are on full blast, then you've got something. Shall we let you know when that happens?"

"No, thanks," the reporter replied.

MacLeish to Get Cordial Welcome at Library

By the Associated Press.

Archibald MacLeish, the poet, will get a cordial welcome from the staff at the Library of Congress, even if the American Library Association does think he is a little weak on card index systems.

MacLeish's nomination as Librarian of Congress has been approved by a Senate committee despite the library association's argument that he lacks technical experience. Senate confirmation has been generally predicted.

"What the library needs is a man with a vision and a love of books," said the head of one important division. "It doesn't matter so much whether he is a trained librarian. His job is an administrative one."

Of the eight librarians the institution has had during its 137 years, two have been politicians, one a physician and four newspapermen. Herbert Putnam, the retiring administrator, is the only one who was a technically trained librarian.

During its early years, the library was kept in the Capitol Building, and the first two librarians were clerks of the House of Representatives.

Patrick Magruder, who held the office when the British burned the Capitol, managed to haul several loads of books away by ox cart, but quite a few volumes were burned. Congress was highly indignant, and Magruder resigned.

Thomas Jefferson came to the rescue of the almost bookless library and donated between 9,000 and 10,000 volumes from his own private collection.

About 15 years later, Andrew Jackson decided he did not like Librarian George Watterston's political beliefs. As no specific term of office is set for the librarian, Jackson booted Watterston out despite protests of members of Congress that the President had no authority over the library.

Jackson's appointee, John Silva Meehan, publisher of a Washington paper who had taken an active part in his campaigns, kept the job for 32 years. He was yanked out by Abraham Lincoln when the latter decided it would not do to have a Southern sympathizer running the Library of Congress for Yankee members.

There were three other librarians until 1899, when the way was opened for Putnam's appointment. A graduate of Harvard and Columbia, he had qualified as a lawyer and then turned to running libraries at Minneapolis and Boston.

House Votes Full Funds for 5,500 Planes

Republican Drive To Reduce Program To 4,217 Ships Fails

Full funds to build the Army's air power to 5,500 first-line planes were voted yesterday by the House, as a $292,695,547 supplemental military supply bill was passed and sent to the Senate.

The House reversed its action of Wednesday when a solidly voting Republican minority succeeded tentatively in cutting the Administration program to 4,217 planes. Only a quick adjournment kept the measure from passing then with the funds for 2,467 additional planes cut in half.

Yesterday, with the large Democratic majority present, a roll call tally showed 217 voting for the full program to 150 for the cut. Before final passage—by voice vote—the House rejected, 187 to 112 another Republican attempt to cut the plane appropriation, this time coupled with a proviso to utilize $9,000,000 of the $37,000,000 cut for air research.

Fund for Colored Cut Out

An amendment written into the bill Wednesday, requiring that $1,000,000 of the $8,000,000 for aviation training be set aside to train colored pilots, also was eliminated, 207 to 43, on a standing vote.

Only one change was made on the floor—a proviso making discretionary with the President the construction of planes in excess of 4,217 being stricken on a point of order. As it goes to the Senate, $222,198,047 is provided in cash and $70,497,500 in contract authorization for the plane program, strengthening Panama Canal defenses and providing "educational orders" to gear industry to war production.

Besides planes, funds are provided for new air bases in Alaska, Puerto Rico, Panama, and northeastern and southeastern United States. An air depot will also be constructed in the Southeast. Army officials propose to ask the Senate to restore $18,250,000 cut from the "educational orders" program by the House Appropriation Committee, but otherwise the measure is expected to go through intact.

Record Peace Appropriations

The bill would bring to $1,781,981,847 the appropriations and contract authorizations voted for the Army and Navy so far this session, a record for any peacetime year.

Meanwhile, the War Department announced that during the first two weeks of June, contracts totaling $4,359,728 were let for various types of Army supplies. The largest order, for $1,423,320 went to Curtiss-Wright Corp. for propeller assemblies and governors.

Niece by Marriage Tells of Romance With Producer

New York, June 22 (AP).—Martin Beck's niece-by-marriage sobbed today that she had engaged in intimacies with the 71-year-old theatrical producer and that thereafter he gave her free access to his wealth and bought her all the luxuries of life.

Mrs. Lillian Schrein interspersed smiles with weeping spells as she testified in her defense against charges of stealing $60,000 while working for Beck, whom she called "Pop."

At an intermission of her testimony, the pretty 36-year-old defendant approached her husband, Bertram Schrein, and cried:

"Do you hate me"

Roosevelt Asks Huge Federal Loan Program

$3,860,000,000 in Self-Liquidating Projects Proposed over a two-year period to foreign governments and the money used to buy American goods. The President emphasized that this would not violate the Johnson foreign loan act. Loans, it is understood, would be primarily to Latin-American governments.

$750,000,000 for Roads

The Federal works agency would be authorized to make loans totaling $750,000,000 over a four-year period for self-liquidating toll roads in congested areas, bridges, high-speed highways and city by-passes.

The agency, which would become a major lending agency, would buy $500,000,000 of rail equipment over a three-year period and lease it to poorer railroads. The President previously had indicated that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would handle the rail equipment program. The change gave rise to speculation on the extent to which Jesse H. Jones, RFC chairman, is participating in the plan.

Rural Electrification

The Agriculture Department would advance $20,000,000 in the next fiscal year toward a seven-year $460,000,000 expansion of rural electrification to provide 1,250,000 new farm families with current.

The department also would have charge of a $500,000,000 extension of the Farm Security Administration program for tenant farm purchases, rehabilitation program, and loans to resettlement co-operatives, for minor improvements and repairs, and for water facilities.

Loans in the next fiscal year would total $870,000,000, exclusive of housing construction, the President estimated.

Quick Consideration

Byrnes declared the plan would receive immediate consideration. He indicated that he favored it, although he wanted to know more about the proposal for loans to foreign governments.

He conferred with Senator Barkley (Democrat), of Kentucky, on procedure. Expectation was that the program would be the subject of a conference between the President and Congressional leaders. The President invited a conference.

The program is part of a broad Administration attack on lagging business. Administration officials are anxious over New Deal chances in 1940 unless business can be stimulated and the large unemployment total cut down.

Provision for capital funds to small business, broad changes in the tax laws, and a drive for increased housing construction are other phases of the broader plan.

"A Permanent Policy"

The President, at a special press conference, said a cut in the 5 per cent maximum rate on mortgages insured by the Federal Housing Administration was being considered. But this would not require legislation, he explained.

The significant feature of the new program is that it is designed to be "a permanent policy of the Government," and is based on the spending-lending and budget-making theories advanced before the monopoly committee some weeks ago by Dr. Alvin H. Hansen, Harvard University professor of political economy, and Lauchlin Currie, Federal Reserve Board research expert. Dr. Hansen championed the "double budget" idea, under which money advanced for self-liquidating projects would be kept separate from the regular budget.

National Defense Angle

With respect to rail equipment purchases, the President reiterated that a special corporation might be set up to buy and lease equipment. Equipment would be bought, he explained, under special arrangement with particular roads.

Owing to the rundown nature of rail equipment, this feature has a national defense angle. Experts say railroads are in no position to handle traffic on a wartime basis.

The Export-Import Bank, which is an adjunct of the RFC, would handle the foreign loans.

Typical comment in Congress follows:

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana: "I am not enamored of the plan to have the Government buy equipment and lease it to the railroads."

Senator Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina: "This is just another shinplaster over the cancer. The others have dropped off."

Senator Wagner (Democrat), of New York: "The proposals will help to stimulate the durable goods industries, which particularly need help at this time."

Senator Bridges (Republican), of New Hampshire: "Looks as though he is laying the way for announcing for a third term."

The President's Letter to Senator Byrnes on Works Program

President Roosevelt's letter to Senator Byrnes outlining a new public works program follows:

Dear Senator Byrnes:

I have your letter of the 19th in which you ask my position as to the provision of the "work relief and public works appropriation act of 1939" as passed by the House of Representatives (H. R. Res. 326) which would allot $125,000,000 to the Public Works Administration for loans and grants for non-Federal public works.

I am opposed to this provision. It means simply that 165,000 men who are badly in need of work will have to be dropped from the Works Progress Administration rolls; men who in the great majority of cases are the sole support of families whose subsistence depends on this slender income. What will happen to most of these men is that they will be forced onto already overburdened direct relief rolls of cities, towns and counties, or, if these are insufficient to care for them, onto private charity.

Loans for Projects

I believe there is a better way to accomplish the laudable purpose of this bill. The great majority of people of this country have come to realize that there are certain types of public improvements and betterments which should be undertaken at times when there is need for a stimulus to employment. At such times the Federal Government should furnish funds for projects of this kind at a low rate of interest, it being clearly understood that the projects themselves shall be self-liquidating and of such a nature as to furnish a maximum of employment per dollar of investment.

There seems no reason why there should not be adopted as a permanent policy of the Government the development and maintenance of a revolving fund fed from the earnings of these Government investments and used to finance new projects at times when there is need of extra stimulus to employment. Such times will recur in the future, as they have in the past, and there will always be need for public facilities and improvements in our natural resources which can be most profitably met by the use at times of greatest need of employment of the accumulated receipts of such a revolving fund.

To Be Self-Liquidating

At my suggestion, various departments and agencies of the Government have canvassed the situation to find projects which will meet genuine public needs—projects that can be put under way quickly and, of great importance, will be self-liquidating. They have found a variety of such projects which have stood the test of careful scrutiny and which hold the promise of a great volume of productive expenditure and employment. I believe this is a much sounder method of dealing with the problem than the diversion of $125,000,000 of work-relief funds. All can be financed through the issuance of guaranteed securities by Government agencies with good prospect of repayment of both principal and interest through earnings.

I have caused estimates to be made of the extent of the field for investment of funds in revenue: earning channels on a self-liquidating basis and in no way competitive with private enterprise. The estmates are, I believe, conservative. The types of projects I have in mind are listed below, together with the sums which, it is estimated, can be put to work to provide employment for men and machines in diverse lines of industry within the coming fiscal year. These projects are in addition to programs already submitted.

	Pro-gram	Total Loan Amt. Dis-bursements	Dura-tion of Pro-jects	Loan Amt. Fiscal Year 1940.
I. Federal Works Agency:
(a) Non-Federal public works: Projects of the self-financing type to be financed by loans at sufficiently low rates of interest to stimulate borrowing for this purpose. The type of projects would be water works, sewage disposal plants, bridges, hospitals and other municipal projects.	2	*$350		*$150
(b) Express Post-roads: Self-liquidating toll roads, bridges, high-speed highways and city by-passes.	4	*750		*150
(c) Railroad equipment: Authority to purchase all types of railroad equipment which is to be leased to railroads at a rate which will return the cost to the United States over a period of years. Carriers would have the option to buy the leased equipment.	3	*500		*100
II. Department of Agriculture:
(a) Rural Electrification: Expansion of present rural electrification program to reach a maximum of 1¼ million rural families not now receiving electric service nor likely to receive such service in the near future.	7	*460		*20
(b) Farm Tenant program: Expansion of self-liquidating portion of the Farm Security Administration for tenant farm purchases, rehabilitation program, loans for minor improvements and repairs, loans to resettlement co-operatives, and loans for water facilities.	2	*500		*250
III. Foreign Loans: Extension of short and long-term loans to foreign governments for the purpose of promoting our foreign trade. The proceeds of these loans would be spent in the United States and would be used for development and reconstruction purposes in the foreign country.	2	*500		*200
Totals		*$1306		*$870

Stimulant Seen

This program would stimulate a greater amount of productive expenditure than is indicated by the total estimated loan disbursements of $870,000,000 for the fiscal year 1940. Some parts of it will involve additional local expenditures not financed by Federal funds, and other indirect expenditures will be generated.

To give effect to the program outlined above, some supplementary legislation will be necessary. As a part, however, of the whole program for stimulating productive employment, I include another proposal which will not require legislation in addition to that now pending. This is the expansion of the public housing program of the United States Housing Authority through extending its borrowing power by $800,000,000. I have already indicated my approval of this legislation.

If you think well of such a program as I have outlined, I shall be glad to confer with you and your colleagues and with members of the House of Representatives. I am sending copies of this letter to the chairmen of the Appropriations, Finance and Banking and Currency committees of the Ways and Means, Banking and Currency and Appropriations committees of the House.

Sincerely,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT.

Byrnes Note Cited

The President wrote Senator Byrnes in response to the following communication he received from the Senator under date of June 19:

"Dear Mr. President:

"The resolution passed by the House on the 16th, making an appropriation for work relief, provides that of the amount appropriated $125,000,000 shall be transferred to the Public Works Administration.

"You did not submit to the Congress an estimate for an appropriation for the Public Works Administration. I wish you would advise me what effect, in your opinion, this transfer will have upon the number of persons to be furnished employment during the next fiscal year, and whether you believe the transfer wise.

"Very respectfully,

"JAMES F. BYRNES."

10-Hour Limit Set on Debate On Neutrality

House Group Agrees To No Restrictions On Amendments

The House Rules Committee yesterday voted a green light for the Administration's neutrality bill in the House next week under a 10-hour debate limitation and no restriction on amendments.

Stipulating only that debate be concluded in two days, the committee granted a rule to Representative Bloom (Democrat), of New York, acting chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee. Bloom probably will call up the measure on Tuesday.

Meantime, Representative Scrugham, (Democrat), of Nevada, chairman of the House Democratic steering committee, following a check of House sentiment, predicted members will approve arms embargo repeal provisions of the Bloom measure.

Report on Poll Monday

At the request of the leadership, the steering committee is polling the bill's strength in the House. Results of the poll were to be reported at a meeting yesterday but when the check proved incomplete Scrugham postponed the meeting until Monday.

"A majority of House Democrats still are uncommitted on all features of the bill," Scrugham said last night. "I think I am safe in saying a majority will vote to repeal the mandatory arms embargo. I can make no such prediction, however, on provisions empowering the President to establish combat zones in which American travel would be restricted. There appears much opposition to that provision and I cannot forecast the outcome."

Both arms embargo repeal, and power for the President to set up combat zones, were key provisions of Secretary of State Hull's recommendations to Congress. But of chief Administration concern was the arms embargo provision, which, neutrality bill sponsors argue, will operate in favor of Germany and other totalitarian powers, who already have adequate munitions supplies. The proposed repeal would sanction "cash-and-carry" arms trade with all belligerents, but admittedly would give a trading advantage to Britain and France, in control of the seas.

Committee Must Choose

House Republicans apparently were concentrating their opposition on the "combat zone" section. Although Representative Fish, of New York, and Representative Tinkham, of Massachusetts, leaders of the Republican opposition, oppose the bill in toto, other influential members refuse to go with them all the way. For example, Representatives Wadsworth and Barton, of New York, are expected to support repeal of the arms embargo, but may oppose combat zone powers for the President.

Waiting on House action, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee still must choose between half a dozen conflicting amendments pending before that divided group. After three committee postponements the legislation has been made a special order of business in the Senate foreign relations group for next Wednesday.

Representative Johnson (Democrat), of Texas, yesterday told the House rules unit there was no disposition in the House "to filibuster on this bill."

she had seen Buckner cash many checks.

She added that on one occasion she had loaned him "ten or twenty dollars," and that he had paid it back next day by check. She said she couldn't recall "definitely" whether it was a check on the bondholders protective committee.

She was vague, too, about what had been her understanding of Buckner's business—said she believed he had told her he was "trying to get full control of a railroad."

Through the day's other major witness, Louis Maged, of the Securities and Exchange Commission, Maloney attempted to link Felipe Buencamino, a Philippine legislator and one of the defendants, directly with the alleged conspiracy.

After telling of Buckner's arrest here last December, as he stepped from the liner Queen Mary, Maged testified the young promoter had thus explained a letter in which Buencamino was represented as having demanded $50,000:

"You have to grease the palms of those Philippine officials."

The Government contends that Buckner headed a scheme under which the bonds were to be bought in a low market, and that then rumors were to be spread that the Philippine government would redeem the defaulted securities, thus greatly running up the price.

At the time of his indictment Buencamino was specifically accused by U. S. Attorney John T. Cahill of having agreed to accept a $50,000 bribe to help "engineer" through the insular assembly the necessary redemptive legislation.

Veterans' Unit To Hire 1,700

The Veterans' Administration will employ some 1,700 persons in new positions throughout the country beginning July 1, it was announced yesterday. These new positions will enable the Administration to carry out the eight-hour day, 5½-day week in its 84 units.

New positions will include hospital and domiciliary attendants, mess attendants, staff and junior nurses, cooks, guards, chauffeurs and others. Employes will be chosen from the Civil Service register.

U. S. Doubles Swatow Forces

the warning, which foreign officials said was not received yesterday until two hours after the Japanese announced the fall of Swatow and cessation of hostilities.

The United States Navy Department announced Admiral Yarnell informed the Japanese that the permanent duty of United States naval vessels is the protection of American citizens and to go wherever necessary at any time to carry out that mission, and to remain as long as Americans need protection or assistance.

Holds Japanese Responsible

The admiral declared "it is not considered that this (the Japanese) warning relieves the Japanese authorities in the slightest degree of responsibility for damage or injury to United States naval vessels or personnel."

(Admiral Yarnell, moreover, according to the International News Service, issued a warning to the Japanese that they will be held responsible for any injury to American lives or property resulting from Nippon's operations—Editor's note.]

The United States destroyer Pillsbury, which stood by in the inner harbor yesterday to protect 48 Americans in Swatow, was joined by the destroyer Pope, and the coastal gunboat Asheville will leave Hongkong tomorrow for the port.

The Pope and Pillsbury, among the Navy's so-called "flush-deckers" are four-stackers of 1,190 tons and 314 feet overall each. Their main armament consists of four 4-inch guns and 50-caliber machine guns. Both were launched in 1920.

(The Asheville was built in 1918, is 241 feet overall and has a displacement of 1,270 tons. She carries three 4-inch, 50-caliber guns, two 3-pounders and three 1-pounders.)

Britain doubled her naval force there with the arrival of the destroyer Scout to support the Thanet. Twenty women and children of Swatow's British community of 80 sailed for Hongkong aboard two British merchantmen.

Oriental and occidental accounts differed as to the nature of the Japanese warning.

British naval quarters in Hongkong said foreign ships had been "ordered" to leave Swatow harbor by 1 p. m. today (midnight Wednesday, Eastern standard time), but a Japanese naval spokesman in Shanghai said only "the usual warning" had been given to foreigners to leave a zone of possible hostilities.

He denied that there had been any time limit. (A naval ministry spokesman in Tokyo said foreigners and foreign vessels were "free to leave Swatow at any time.")

Americans Better Treated

Admiral Yarnell's rejection of the Japanese communication was issued from Chinwangtao, North China, where the cruiser Augusta, his flagship, is anchored.

The conflict between the Japanese and third-power authorities came as the Japanese blockaded the British and French concessions in Tientsin for the ninth day and they were charged with forcing British to undergo indignities and insults.

Americans have escaped the treatment meted the British and the Swatow issues developed a further instance of contrasting handling of Americans and British.

Japanese naval headquarters in Swatow issued a statement expressing "appreciation of the American Navy's sympathetic attitude toward Japanese operations at Swatow."

The statement gave no explanation of what constituted this "sympathetic attitude" but Admiral Yarnell, in his rejection, said American warships would try to avoid interference with Japanese operations so far as was consistent with the duty of looking after United States interests.

Another Japanese statement said the destroyer Pope was escorted into Swatow harbor by a Japanese warship, after which Capt. John T. G. Stapler, commander of the United States Navy's South China patrol, made a courtesy call on Japanese Rear Admiral Eijiro Kondo.

Japanese messages bestowed no such compliments to the British, and Domei (Japanese news agency) reported the destroyer Scout ignored Japanese instructions when entering Swatow harbor.

Swatow itself was reported quiet.

Hull Not to Act

By the Associated Press.

High officials here strongly backed tonight the stand of Admiral Yarnell, who sharply rejected a Japanese request that the United States destroyer Pillsbury leave the Chinese port of Swatow.

While concurring in this, and in Yarnell's notice that Japan would be held responsible for any damage or injury she inflicted on American vessels or personnel, officials here indicated that no diplomatic action was planned as a result of the Japanese request.

Secretary of State Hull took the position that the request was similar to a series of requests in the past and that it had been made in advance of Japanese occupation of Swatow.

According to the text of the Japanese request—at least in the form in which it was received here officially from Shanghai—Japan informed the foreign consul at Shanghai that she was about to undertake the occupation of Swatow and asked that foreign nationals and foreign vessels evacuate to a safe distance and keep away from the danger zone while the city was being taken.

On previous occasions, when Japan warned of hostilities in an area and asked foreigners to leave, the State Department's attitude has been as follows:

To advise Americans living in the prospective danger zone that the military advance was imminent;

To urge them to leave the danger zone or to mark their homes clearly with an American flag;

Having taken these precautions, to continue the protection of Americans, or damage to their properties incurred by the Japanese invasion.

Two Interesting Films Make Their Local Bows

'Invitation to Happiness' Hit at Palace; 'Sun Never Sets' Pleases Keith Crowds; Supplementary Films of High Caliber

"INVITATION TO HAPPINESS," Paramount picturization of a story by Mark Jerome, adapted to the screen by Claude Binyon, starring Irene Dunne and Fred MacMurray, with Charlie Ruggles, Billy Cook, William Collier, sr., Marion Martin, Oscar O'Shea, Burr Caruth and Eddie Hogan. Directed by Wesley Ruggles. Previewed Tuesday afternoon, June 13, at the Palace Theater.

"THE SUN NEVER SETS," Universal picturization of a screen play by W. P. Lipscomb, based on a story by Jerry Horwin and Arthur Fitz-Richard, starring Douglas Fairbanks, jr., and Basil Rathbone, with Barbara O'Neil, Lionel Atwill, Virginia Field, C. Aubrey Smith, Melville Cooper, Mary Forbes, John Burton, Arthur Mulliner, Theodor Von Eltz and Douglas Walton. Directed by Rowland V. Lee. Reviewed Thursday afternoon, At RKO-Keith's Theater.

There ought to be something for every amusement taste in this new Paramount release, which opened yesterday on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. While it unfolds its story against a prize-ring background, "Invitation to Happiness" is far more than another "prize-fight film." It is a romantic drama, entertaining and intelligently told, that will exert a direct appeal to every mature and discriminating theatergoer—especially all sweethearts, wives and mothers.

BELL

"Invitation to Happiness" is based primarily on a clash of two contrasting personalities and their conflicting notions of what are the really important things of life. When the wealthy Mr. Wayne buys a half interest in Albert "King" Cole, likely heavyweight champion prospect, to aid his old friend Pop Hardy out of financial difficulties, Eleanor Wayne takes an immediate interest in her father's new "property." They are married almost immediately, the rich girl and the boy from the wrong side of the tracks. The usual impediments to happiness immediately begin to spring up. "King" Cole is separated from his family for long periods, while he battles his way around the country on his way to the top, and divorce finally seems the only solution. At the age of 10, Albert Cole, jr., scarcely knows his father and resents his apparent abandonment of his mother.

Loses Through Love for Son

The judge decrees that for six months Albert, jr., shall live with his father; after that decide for himself with which parent he wishes to make his permanent home. In his effort to win the affection of the son in whom his heart is bound up, "King" slights his training for the championship bout and loses the fight with his boy watching his defeat from a front-row seat. The picture then reaches its climax and denouement in as logical and sound an analysis of the psychology of defeat as the screen ever has reflected. As a matter of fact, I believe this is the first time the cinema has successfully converted defeat into a definite asset.

There is a great deal of pith and substance in "Invitation to Happiness." It expounds a believable tale of the incongruities that necessarily must attend such a match as that between the millionairess and the "pug." Its action is diversified and embraces spirited scenes in night clubs, training camps and the ring, in addition to the more persuasive intervals that have their locale in the palatial home of the rich Mr. Wayne.

The picture, to all intents and purposes, is perfectly cast. Irene Dunne, as Eleanor Wayne, has opportunity to portray another of her most appealing screen characters. Her performance ranges from light comedy to deepest emotionalism and she never strikes a false note. Fred MacMurray, as the battler, never has brought so impressive a characterization to the silver sheet. He looks every inch the heavyweight fighter and acts every inch the devoted, but baffled, husband and father. William Collier, sr., has his best role in months as the gold-plated Mr. Wayne and Charlie Ruggles, playing "straight," does an immensely fine job as "King" Cole's manager and trainer.

Master Cook Scores

Master Billy Cook takes his place among the stellar members of the cast by his fine impersonation of the son who couldn't find it in his heart to love his father until after he had seen him beaten more or less into a pulp for the count of ten. Marion Martin is a ravishing blonde night club siren and Oscar O'Shea, Burr Caruth and Eddie Hogan, the champ, round out the support.

Foremost among the short subjects on the Palace screen this new week is Robert Benchley's "Black Magic," in which he demonstrates to his son how not to do a considerable number of parlor tricks, finally doing a couple, much to his own amazement—especially the last one. A Fitz-Patrick Traveltalk, "Picturesque Udaipur," and the "News of the Day" complete a program that assays high in engrossing entertainment.

It is a rousing melodrama of the heroism of the field men of the British Colonial Office in their fight against espionage, sabotage and all manner of treasonable enterprises that is revealed in this Universal production, presented yesterday for the first time on a Washington screen at RKO-Keith's Theater. While the picture deals primarily with the fidelity of Britain's foreign agents to family tradition and patriotic duty, it has also a strong romantic vein in which wives and sweethearts of the Randolph clan are principally involved.

The locale of "The Sun Never Sets," for the most part, is on the African Gold Coast, with its jungles, physical hardships and other discouragements to the minute pursuit of duty. The principal characters are two brothers, John and Clive Randolph, whose forebears have been "in the service" for generations on end. John can see no profit in a life devoted to country instead of self, but succumbs, rather speedily I thought, to the arguments of his family. Clive has just been returned from the Gold Coast, with a home office post in prospect, when he is ordered back to the dismal station from which he has just come. John, newly inducted into the service of his country, is dispatched with him as a bit of "camouflage." Someone is needed for a "front" while Clive, with his wider experience, runs down one Dr. Zurof, who has set up a radio station in an abandoned mine that suddenly comes to life and is rapidly pushing the world to the brink of war with his inflammatory broadcasts, the origin of which is a mystery to every major power.

Bombs Do the Work

Dr. Zurof, a millionaire eccentric, who, of course, would have to be a munitions manufacturer, intent on creating a market for his wares, is a sly and slippery fellow. Not sly and slippery enough, however, to elude the clever trap set for him by the Randolph boys. They do him no good whatever with a fleet of bombing planes and save the world from catastrophe.

In the large view, "The Sun Never Sets" does for the British foreign service what so many of our recent films have done for democracy and the ideals of American governmental ideology. It gets pretty thick and a little hard to swallow in some of the more flamboyant of its manifestations, but still is a picture that grips interest and commands respect.

The pivotal roles are played by Douglas Fairbanks, jr., and Basil Rathbone, the one with the vacillation of a youth in over his head; the other with the assurance of a man long in the service. It is the youthful John Randolph who finally points the way to the eradication of Dr. Zurof as a threat to international peace. This feat is accomplished in a climacteric sequence as exciting as the final scenes in "Dawn Patrol," for example. It was difficult yesterday afternoon to detect any particular in which the Messrs. Fairbanks and Rathbone failed to discharge their duties effectively.

As the patriarch of the Randolph family, C. Aubrey Smith has a minor, but vital, role which he plays with complete conviction: Lionel Atwill also does one of his best chores as Dr. Zuroff and Melville Cooper, John Burton, Arthur Mulliner, Theodore von Eltz and Douglas Walton all contribute to the tautness of a grim and suspenseful story.

Women Play Part

On the distaff side, Barbara O'Neill, Virginia Field and Mary Forbes carry the entire burden of the picture's feminine appeal—Miss O'Neill as Clive Randolph's wife, Miss Field as John's impetuous sweetheart, and Mary Forbes as the brother's proud mother.

The supplementary features of the new bill at Keith's are led by the new issue of "The March of Time," devoted to "War, Peace and Propaganda," in which again is set forth the turmoil that exists in Europe and the methods that are being adopted to combat it. Interesting and informative, but a little repetitive of what has been covered before. "Sporting Wings," dedicated to airplanes that are privately owned for the fun of the thing; "Beach Picnic," Walt Disney cartoon comedy, and the Pathe News further augment a feature that pleased large audiences yesterday.

Costars in Unique Ring Romance who, with Fred MacMurray, converts "Invitation to Happiness," which opened yesterday on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater, from a conventional prize-ring drama into a psychological romance that subordinates fisticuffing to more substnatial subject matter. He prosecuted the Graham-McKay case, which just was affirmed by the United States Supreme Court . . . Leon Trotsky is building a 10-foot wall around his home in Mexico . . . The Hollywood and Broadway talent scouts have raided the Chapel Theater in Great Neck, now in its second week, and signed three of the cast.

DEFEAT: The producer of a musical comedy saw George White after the show and told him: "It's a very strange thing—there was a lot of applause during the show, but few people laughed. How do you explain a thing like that?" . . . "It's simple," the show-wise White replied. "It's easy to have your friends applaud for you—but you can't make 'em laugh."

DISCORD: Bennett Cerf, the publisher, met Wendell Willkie, the utilities magnate, who is one of the foremost critics of the New Deal . . . "How about writing a book for me," Cerf proposed . . . "You have excellent taste—and it's a deal," Willkie agreed and the terms were settled . . . No mention was made of the fact that Cerf's Random House published the five volumes written by President Roosevelt.

ROYALTY: Michael Farmer telephoned John Perona, proprietor of El Morocco . . . "I'm in Italy," he informed . . . "I've just visited Greece and Yugoslavia—and, would you believe it, I didn't see a King, or a Prince, or even a Baron" . . . "Too bad," Perona consoled. "Too bad" . . . "Who's at El Morocco now?" Farmer asked . . . "Prince Paparthula," Pernoa enumerated, "his brother, the other Prince, and Prince Serge Obolensky."

MISTAKE: Maxine Elliott, who is seriously ill in London now, has conducted the most famous salon in Europe. It was at her home that Vincent Sheean met his father-in-law, Sir Joseph Forbes-Robertson, and George Bernard Shaw . . . Sheean seated himself between these two men and heard them discuss Ellen Terry . . . "Isn't it too bad," said Sheean, "that she had such tough luck with men?" . . . Not for some time later did he remember that both Shaw and Forbes-Robertson had been in love with Miss Terry . . . "I wouldn't say that," was Shaw's only statement. "I would say that men were the ones who had tough luck with Miss Terry."

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, June 22 (INS).—Glamour, for so many months an obsolete word in Hollywood's movie lexicon, is again in the foreground, with our movie actresses seeking roles in which they can again wear smart clothes and look their prettiest. Warner's "Oomph" gal (their personal translation for glamour) has had "Models," a special story, written for her by Jerry Wald, to emphasize her charms.

LOUELLA PARSONS

This time Ann (Miss Sheridan to you) plays a model, with Eddie Albert as her favorite young man. A fashion show, such as you have never seen on land or sea, is being planned by Jack Warner. The cast line-up includes Jane Wyman and Jane Bryan, who play sister models, with Alan Hale in a comedy role. George Hurrell, the well-known portrait photographer, makes his debut playing himself.

At long last, Jimmy Stewart has a definite date with his home studio, M.-G.-M., after he finishes "And It All Came True" at Warner's. For the first time in his career, you will see him on the screen as a priest. He has one of the two important male leads in "Jays Before Lent," based on a soon-to-be-published novel by Hamilton Basso. The other role is a doctor, and Spencer Tracy is a strong prospect. I was interested to hear that Bartlett Cormack is writing the adaptation. He has been in London for two years doing a good job, numbering among his pictures Charles Laughton's "The Beachcomber." But much as he liked working over there, Cormack says when they measured his son for a gas mask, he suddenly found himself yearning for peaceful Hollywood.

We may have a sequel to "Boys Town," the picture that has been one of the No. 1 box office money makers and which has brought credit to the entire industry. The M-G-M chieftains and Father Flanagan are now in the right track by the kindly priest, who has worked hard to maintain a home for them. Spencer Tracy, of course, would again play the part of Father Flanagan.

I've been hearing so much about Adrian's clothes in "The Women," I took myself out to M.-G.-M. just in time to watch the scene where Mary (Norma Shearer) decides to give the gossip Sylvia (Rosalind Russell) a taste of her own medicine. The action takes place in the ladies room of a fashionable night club and I was fascinated with the gowns. Rosalind Russell looked gorgeous, all in black. Norma Shearer has the most fascinating haircut and Joan Fontaine is pretty as a picture.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Charles Boyer and Pat Paterson have persuaded Norma Shearer to accompany them to Paris. They sail August 2 and it's a holiday in gay Paree for Norma; Andrea Leeds' latest escort is our own examiner colleague, Sidney Burnap. They were corned beef and cabbaging at the house of Murphy; Alice Faye is wearing a smile that won't come off, all because Tony Martin planed in today; Paul Muni is bicycling to lose 4 pounds; Princess Baba has issued an ultimatum to Bob Gregory—either he stops wrestling and gets a job by September or else; the Gary Coopers' holiday this year will be a cruise up and down our own Pacific Coast; the "Dead End Kids" have to be shooed off the "On Your Toes" set like so many troublesome flies. It's the chorines that are attracting them.

Constance Bennett is taking voice lessons and really working at it; Gail Patrick is giving Gloria Swanson Somborn a bridal shower in the American room at the Derby. It was Gloria's dad, Herbert Somborn, who founded the Derby and who was Bob Cobb's closest friend; Mose Gumble went social last night and entertained at the Beverly Derby in a big way. He took his guests to the baseball game. It was exciting; Virginia Peine, who was knitting, dropped her yarn and the stoical George Raft let out an Indian whoop; Gail Patrick, usually so dignified, pulled a Lupe Velez and yelled to the boys on the field; Irving Cummings was another who joined the cheering chorus; Lawrence Tibbett and his young son were visiting on the M-G-M lot while I was there today.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow!

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Calif., June 22.—Today I expected to be in Washington, D. C. Guess where I am instead? On "The Women" set, playing a society columnist. And having fierce fun.

HOPPER

I'm the sort of gal who never turns down a job for pleasure. Do you? Must be my early training. But as soon as I finish, I'll plane to New York for a much needed rest, seeing the Fair, settling new radio deal, watching my old pals Bankhead, Hepburn, Freddie March, Katharine Cornell do their stuff.

Then on to Boston to visit my best friend who's been hospitalized four months. Stopping to smell the peonies in Dean Saunders' garden at Hamilton College. Overnight at the Edward Child Carpenter's Home in Connecticut. A swank wedding in Louisville, Ky. Then to Altoona for a real visit with mother. And a drive out to Bedford County, parking on a hilltop, where land is a dollar an acre, to look down into two of the most fertile valleys in the world. One a farmland, other industry. Once I stood there with Barney Baruch and J. Leonard Replogle. The men said in unison: "We've traveled the world over looking for beauty. Never have seen more than this."

R. K. O.'s still trying to get Charles Laughton for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," but Laughton wants them to settle that income tax business amounting to over $100,000—in addition to his salary.

Wonder what would happen if our actors did that in England? Only word I can think of now is —deportation!

Poor Ben Blue slated for the George White show, but his ex-wife threatens to slap him in jail for overdue alimony if he sticks his face in New York. No wonder he seldom smiles!

Our babies now get the dough. In "Sandy Takes a Bow" at Universal 31 babies worked. Prices are 30 days or under, $75 a day; from 30 to 90 days, $50; from 90 to 180 days, $25. Bitsie babies only work 30 seconds under arc lights and stay on the lot only two hours.

One of the biggest ten-percenters fell in the water at Catalina. Came up sputtering, with his wrist watch held to his ear. Instead of thanking his savior, he just breathed a huge sigh, pointed to his watch and said: "It still works."

I'm happy the Marx Brothers "Day at the Circus" has given Buster Keaton a job. I told one of the fellows working on the picture a good gag yesterday. He said: "I'll take that right back to the set. Haven't had a good one since we started."

Lana Turner's new car isn't red—but "Shocking" pink!

Oscar Levant, of whom George Gershwin said: "Only Oscar plays 'Rhapsody in Blue' better than I," is writing story of George's life with two companies bidding for it.

Sugie of the Tropics is fed up listening to clients' betting wails. So he's installed an alarm clock which goes off every five minutes. That's as long as he'll listen to anyone.

When you see "Land of Liberty," notice that shot of the gals driving through muddy streets in "In Old Chicago." It's accompanied by the comment: "Good business on Main Street." The gals were the Belle Watlings of Chicago. Also notice what a swell actress Spring Byington is. Why not give her a good part for a change?

Summer School Sessions Will Open July 3

Lockwood Announces Schedule on First Day of Vacation

On the first day of public school vacation yesterday came the announcement that summer school sessions would open July 3, and run to August 11.

E. J. Lockwood, director in divisions 1 to 9, announced the following schedule:

Senior high summer school, at Roosevelt High, Thirteenth and Upshur streets northwest. Deadline on registration cards for District students, to be sent to the director's office at Central High School, is today. Registration for other school children will be held at the office from 10 a. m. to 1 p. m. June 30. All classes will begin at 8:30 a. m. July 3.

Junior High summer classes will be held at the Powell Junior High School, Hiatt place and Park road northwest, and Hine Junior High, Seventh and C streets southeast. The schedule of classes and the deadline for registration of District junior high students will be the same as for senior high students. Out-of-town students will be permitted to register in the offices of the summer school principals July 3, upon written request from the principals of their own schools.

Buildings for the elementary school classes are Addison School, Blair School, Brown School, Buchanan School, Burroughs School, Emery School, Fairbrother School, Park View School, Wallach School, Webb School, West School and Webster School.

Classes will run from July 3 to August 11. Lockwwood said that the order of preference for admitting pupils will be those who are making up differences, students repeating work for strengthening purposes and students taking advanced work. Sixth grade students planning to take advanced work will be assigned to junior high schools, Lockwood said.

Prof. Hering Talks On 'Scientific Christian Healing'

A lecture on "Scientific Christian Healing" was delivered last night by Prof. Hermann S. Hering, C. S. B., of Boston, in First Church of Christ, Scientist. The lecturer was introduced by Mrs. Helen G. McNeill, second reader. He said, in part:

"It should be clearly seen that scientific Christian healing, which is Christian Science healing, is not a mere mental method or mental process involving simply the entertainment and repetition of certain thoughts. Being scientific it demands accurate, intelligent, metaphysical discernment and analysis and a correct application of its divine principle, which must be done mentally."

"The fact that Christian Scientists have not yet done all the wonderful works done by Jesus and his disciples, nor have yet done all that they know is possible through Christian Science, may be cause for regret but never for discouragement or criticism. . . ."

Model Plane Meet

A model airplane meet, sponsored by the District section of the National Association of Model Dealers, will be held 9 a. m. to 6 p. m. Sunday at Seminary Field, near Bailey's Crossroad, Va. Competition will be open to gas-powered models, rubber-band powered, and gliders, with an entrance fee of 50 cents.

Board of Trade Plans Committee Reorganization

Plans for reorganization of the Board of Trade's municipal finance committee and for expansion of its work for the coming year were announced yesterday by board officials, following a report of the new chairman, E. Barrett Prettyman.

Prettyman said that tax experts, who are members of the Board of Trade, would be assigned to the subcommittees on tax legislation and tax policy of the finance committee. Other important sub-committees will be those on budget policy and appropriation bills, Prettyman said.

Increased activity by the traffic committee and organization of a subcommittee on child traffic education, have been planned, P. Y. K. Howat, chairman, said:

A complete list of committee chairmen, announced by President Lawrence E. Williams, follows:

A. J. Driscoll, American ideals; William P. McCracken, jr., aviation; George C. Shinn, bridges; John F. Victory, charities and corrections; Harry P. Somerville, community affairs; Bruce R. Allen, industrial interests; Frederick P. H. Siddons, insurance and fire protection; Joseph C. McGarraghy, law and legislation; C. Hayward Marshall, membership; E. Barrett Prettyman, municipal finance; Leon Chatelain, jr., municipal art; James C. Wilkes, municipal sanitation; Harvey L. Jones, parks and reservations.

Arthur B. Heaton, public and private buildings; Dr. Arthur C. Christie, public health; B. M. McKelway, public library; Odell S. Smith, public order; George E. Kneipp, public schools; Col. John O. Tilson, public utilities and transportation; John A. Remon, river and harbor improvement; George V. Graham, streets and avenues; P. Y. K. Howat, traffic; Morris Cafritz, universities and private schools; M. O. Leighton, water supply; Harry Blake, zoning; Theodore W. Noyes, national representation; Col. Leroy W. Herron, military and naval affairs, and Edgar Morris, jr., Greater National Capital committee.

Appeals Court Bar Restriction Delayed

The Court of Appeals yesterday put off for one year the effective date of its new rule making two years college education, before the study of law was begun, a requirement for admission to the appellate bar.

The court also fixed at $25 the fee required of lawyers from other jurisdictions who seek admission to practice before it. Excepted were members of the bar of District court or of the Supreme court.

Colored Congress Calls Mass Meeting Sunday

A mass meeting, arranged by the Washington Council of the National Negro Congress, will be held at 4 p. m. Sunday in the Second Baptist Church, 800 block of Third street northwest.

Officials of the congress said the meeting had been arrange to celebrate a year of sane enforcement of law and absence of police killings in the District. Police Chief Ernest N. Brown will be a speaker.

Virginia Historic Tour

A tour of sites in Virginia associated with the life of George Washington will be held Sunday, Frank T. Gartside, acting superintendent of National Capital Parks, announced yesterday.

Laborites Ask Strong Action Against Japan

Chamberlain Faces Growing Demand for Reply to Indignities

By the Associated Press.

London, June 22.—Prime Minister Chamberlain was faced with a growing demand for strong action in the Far East today as Japan continued to subject British subjects at Tientsin to indignities.

He stuck to his previous position, however, that the British government still hoped for a peaceful settlement and would take retaliatory measures against Japan only if negotiations failed.

At one point during the question hour in Commons the opposition grew so hot that the Speaker of the House declared the period closed. The question that brought on this was put by Geoffrey L. Mander, opposition Liberal:

"How many British subjects have to be insulted, stripped and killed before the British government will do anything effective?"

Arthur Greenwood, acting leader of the Labor Party, was one of those who urged the prime minister to take a firmer attitude toward Japan to halt what he called "repeated acts of aggression" against British interests.

Another was Philip J. Noel-Baker, Laborite, who asked:

"Is it not becoming increasingly clear that this is an aggressive attack on foreign rights in China and that this may become an attempt at world domination in the Far East?"

Chamberlain replied: "I hope that may not be the case; if it were it would be very serious."

There was no mention in Commons of the Moscow negotiations in which Britain and France are seeking Soviet Russian adherence to their mutual aid front.

Soviet Pact Hope Grows

Paris, June 22 (AP).—The belief that negotiations among France, Britain and Soviet Russia finally were "getting down to brass tacks" bolstered hopes in diplomatic quarters tonight for eventual conclusion of a tri-power pact against the Rome-Berlin axis.

French sources—disregarding whether a note which the Soviet commissar of foreign affairs, Vyacheslaff Molotoff, today handed to French and British Ambassadors in Moscow was an acceptance or rejection of Paris-London proposals—said in effect:

"At last we are about to know what the Soviets want."

Meanwhile, French officials completed plans for the signing of a new French-Turkish accord of mutual assistance at 6:30 p. m. tomorrow at the foreign office.

At the same hour the Turkish Parliament in Ankara is expected to give formal sanction to a treaty by which France agrees to turn over to Turkey the little republic of Hatay from France's Syrian mandate.

France saw this bargain at once as a strengthening of the French-British front and a lever also to induce Soviet Russia to join.

Sovereigns Hailed As Conquerors

doffed to signify that Their Majesties were once again "in residence."

A crowd estimated at 50,000 massed around the Victoria Memorial in front of the palace, surged through police cordons and pushed against the iron railings, cheering and chanting "we want the King; we want the Queen." Some sang the national anthem, and "Land of Hope and Glory."

Appear on Balcony

Soon the crowd was rewarded. The French windows of the palace balcony swung open at 6:16 and the King and Queen, followed by Princesses Elizabeth and Margaret Rose, stepped forward to be greeted with a new thunder of shouts from the milling throngs below. For five minutes Their Majesties and their daughters remained at the balustrade. The King saluted and then raised his hand above his head with a friendly wave, that unleashed a greater volume of sound.

Queen Mary and other members of the royal family watched from a side window. With a final wave the King and Queen turned and entered the Palace.

The mob began to disperse, but at least 30,000 remained patiently in front of the Palace, and new comers pressed forward from the rear. For two hours the Palace facade echoed shouts of "we want the King and Queen," until at last Their Majesties appeared on the balcony a second time, just as the chilly dusk was settling. The King had changed his uniform as an admiral of the fleet for evening clothes, and the Queen her traveling outfit of powder blue for a dinner gown of pale heliotrope.

Queen Blows Kisses

The slim boyish King waved, and the Queen blew kisses to the crowd, which began to sing "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow." Finally the King and Queen retired for a quiet dinner alone after an exhausting day. The throng stayed on in the hope of bringing them out a third time. Just before 9:30 Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain arrived at the Palace for a brief audience with the King. His car was unrecognized.

Chamberlain had played his role in the homecoming during the afternoon, joining the American Ambassador Joseph P. Kennedy and other top-hatted tail-coated officialdom in greeting Their Majesties as they descended from the royal train to the red-carpeted, flowered and beflagged platform of Waterloo Station, and moving in the House of Commons "an humble address" of "loyal and affectionate welcome."

A similar address was moved in the House of Lords, and then both houses adjourned for half an hour to line the parliament courtyard opposite Westminster Abbey and cheer as the royal procession passed on its way to the Palace.

Moved By U. S. Greeting

"When their Majesties crossed the frontier of the United States," said Chamberlain in addressing the Commons, "the magnificent welcome which they received from the President and from the American people again outdistanced all precedents and it must have delighted Their Majesties' hearts.

"I am certain that it afforded profound gratification to their subjects throughout the Empire, and I can speak for the people of this country when I say that we have all been profoundly moved by the warmth of this greeting which we acclaim both as a personal tribute to the King and Queen and also as a striking proof of the sympathy and friendly feeling of the United States."

To which Arthur Greenwood, spokesman for the labor party, appended this comment:

"If the President of the United States should visit this country, he would receive an equally warm welcome."

The House broke into cheers.

"The visit of Their Majesties to the United States opened a new chapter in relations between this country and the American Republic," Greenwood continued. "It proved that blood was thicker than water, but it proved even more—the brotherhood of peoples who live under a flag of freedom and democracy."

Real Understanding

"The enthusiastic welcome in the United States was, I believe, the outpouring of the pent-up feelings of a great people's desire to make known their fundamental unity of purpose with Britain and her sister nations. There is for the world as a whole a profound significance in the reception which the King and Queen received."

Greenwood said the visit to America "proved that there is a real understanding that Britain and America are facing common problems, sharing common ideals, desiring what all men and women of good will desire—the maintenance of peace and freedom, and the establishment of enduring prosperity in the world."

London's fountains did not bubble with wine today as they did in bygone centuries, when other monarchs came home. But there was no mistaking the sparkle of spontaneity in the warm welcome that George and Elizabeth received.

The skies threatened all day, until Their Majesties reached London, recalling the remark of Edward III to adulating mobs, when he stepped ashore at Sandwich from the opening phase of the Hundred Years' War:

"Holy Mary, why is that when I go abroad the weather ever smiles on me and frowns when I return?"

It rained slightly on King George and his Queen as they stepped ashore at Southampton from the great white Empress of Britain, which had loomed out of the mist down Southampton water and was hauled captive to the dock side by a dozen or more fussing tugboats at 2:39 p. m.

Yet nothing could dampen the ardor of the welcome that England gave its sovereigns today, nor could a modern reporter echo the words of the ubiquitous Samuel Pepys, who went to The Hague as a "foreign correspondent" to record the return of Charles II to a people weary of Cromwell's dictatorship and wrote: "He was in a sad, poor condition for clothes and money."

The prime minister's talk with King George this evening lasted for almost two hours and the fact that it lasted so long, in spite of the King's weariness after such a day, was considered significant. In some quarters it was thought King George had had so much of importance to tell the prime minister, as about the King's talks with President Roosevelt on the international situation and about the possible future Anglo-American co-operation and "parallel action," that the talk could not have been put off even until tomorrow.

Dr. and Mrs. Hanks, of Arlington, to Spend 3 Years 10 Minutes' Walk From Leper Colony

She'll Read, Take Movies While He Carries on Research

Dr. John Harold Hanks, of Arlington, Va., a professor of bacteriology at George Washington University, is shown with his wife and children, who will accompany him to the leper colony at Culion, Philippine Islands, where he will study causes of the disease

How close to danger Dr. and Mrs. John Harold Hanks, of Arlington, Va., will be in the next three years all depends on how far a person can walk in ten minutes. That, according to Mrs. Hanks, is the time it takes to cover the distance between the cottage in which they will live on Culion, an island in the Philippines and a leper colony with 9,000 inmates.

As an associate of the Leonard Wood Memorial Foundation, Dr. Hanks, a professor of bacteriology at George Washington University, will leave for Culion with his family some time after August 1. For the next 36 months his time will be taken up with microscopes and laboratories in a study of the organism which causes leprosy. But Mrs. Hanks, who went to Edinboro State Teachers College in Pennsylvania to prepare herself for a career of teaching, won't find time heavy on her hands either if she follows the schedule she has mapped out.

With the next port of call 200 miles away and with the postman ringing the doorbell only every 10 days, she has figured out how to give up movies and teas in a part of the world where these things just don't exist.

She's bought herself a moving picture camera and she plans not only to do her own snapshooting, but to develop her own films and project them herself. She also intends to get in some heavy reading—if the mail delivers the books in time. Then there are her little boys, John King, 7, and Jimmy, 5, whose tutor she will be.

Living on the island will be one other woman, a Mrs. Wade, whose husband has been stationed there as a bacteriologist for a great many years. Mrs. Hanks doesn't know, at this point, whether or not Mrs. Wade plays bridge.

Following fashions is practically no problem at all in the tropics. Cotton is chic for all occasions. "However," admitted Mrs. Hanks, who is busy superintending the family packing, "I won't be able to keep track of whether skirts are long or short."

She'll do all her marketing by mail-order catalog and she'll have to learn to cook on a kerosene stove. Electricity is cabled over to Culion from another island and this means that during the day the only current available will be that used for refrigeration. After dark, power is generated from a plant on Culion, itself. This may mean that lights will have to be out at a certain time every evening.

Dr. Hanks, who has been specializing in the study of tuberculosis for eight years, is an alumnus of the Yale Graduate School where he received his Ph. D. He has been at George Washington University for seven years and before that was at Harvard for one.

In addition to research in his own field, he expects to carry on the studies on skin reactions made by the late Dr. Earl Baldwin McKinley, former dean of the George Washington University Medical School. Dr. McKinley was lost on the Hawaiian Clipper last year.

Duke, Wallis Are Dined by German Envoy

Get Nazi Salute; Politics Denied; May Visit Spain

By International News Service.

Paris, June 22.—The Duke and Duchess of Windsor were guests of honor tonight at a dinner given by Count Johannes von Welczek, German Ambassador to France, on the eve of the former British King's forty-fifth birthday.

The couple received the Nazi salute upon entering and leaving the German Embassy, where the dinner party was held. Approximately 20 members of the diplomatic corps in Paris attended the glittering function.

The duchess was attired in a flowing summer evening gown, with an ermine cape over her shoulders.

Members of the couple's retinue and circle of friends emphasized that there was no political significance, pointing out that Count von Welczek has been a friend of the duke for many years.

Meanwhile, French rumors had it that the duke and duchess will visit nationalist Spain in mid-July. The duke's secretary said nothing was known of such a plan.

Squalus Survivor, an Expert, Urges New Type Valve at Quiz

By the United Press.

Portsmouth, N. H. June 22.—A naval court of inquiry completed the first phase of its investigation of the Squalus disaster today.

The testimony of the last of the 33 survivors wound up the inquiry into the actual sinking of the 1,450-ton submarine May 23. Tomorrow the court, convening for what will probably be its final session prior to the raising of the submarine, will hear Navy officials who directed the rescue of the survivors.

At today's session Harold C. Preble, of Portsmouth, a naval architect and only civilian survivor, recommended a change in the design of the main engine induction valve—supposed cause of the disaster—on all submarines in the United States Navy.

Preble, who has participated in official tests of more than 25 submarines in his 22 years at the navy yard here, told the board that he believed all submarines should be equipped "without delay" with quick-closing inboard engine induction valves operated by remote control.

Up to the time of the sinking of the Squalus—a mishap that cost 26 lives—Preble believed the present design for such valves a "pretty good" one.

"Now I know that it is not," he added.

He also urged quick-closing hull ventilation stops to stop any great inrush of water into a submarine.

Filthy Roaches in the Kitchen?

Here's how to get rid of them. First, keep the floor under the sink, refrigerator, stove, etc., free from dampness and food particles. That's what attracts bugs. Second, get a can of Bee Brand Insect Powder. Sprinkle it in all corners, back of and under the sink, refrigerator, stove, etc., and around openings where pipes go through the floor. Blow it into cracks and crevices, back of and under wall boards. When roaches scurry out, give them another dose of powder. Third, sprinkle Bee Brand Powder in the runways where roaches travel. Repeat these directions at weekly intervals, and your kitchen will soon be rid of roaches.

Bee Brand Insect Powder really kills roaches, ants and other crawling insects quick—yet it's entirely safe to use around the house. Insist on the genuine Bee Brand Insect Powder. It's sold with a guarantee of satisfaction or your money back. Three sizes: 10¢, 25¢, 50¢.

NOTE: You can also kill roaches and ants, as well as flies and mosquitoes, with Bee Brand Insect Spray. Read directions on can.

Mother And Daughter

Amid a welter of whistles and flutter of flags this season's belle of the ocean, the new Mauretania, will arrive in New York tomorrow morning with her thousand passengers and her cargo of silver and gold. No doubt there will be many to say that, handsome as this debutante may be, she is not the beauty her mother was.

Certainly she has not her mother's figure. And this is no mere matter of embonpoint either. This newest of the great Cunarders is heavier than her namesake by only 3,000 tons or so, and larger in the waist by a bare 18 inches. But Diana herself had not more supple lines than had the old Mauretania. Nor was Diana pursuing a stag ever a prettier sight than this queen of the ocean greyhounds showing her heels to her own wake.

For 22 years her supremacy was undisputed. On her maiden voyage, in 1907, the old Mauretania broke all records. That was only a beginning. In September, 1910, she made the westward crossing from Liverpool in 4 days 21 hours and 44 minutes. Thereafter she added one conquest to another until in 1929 she was at last bested by the upstart Bremen. But she was the kind to die fighting. If she couldn't better the Bremen's record she bettered her own. It was in 1929, when the shadow of her end was already athwart her beams, that she made her greatest eastbound crossing at an average speed of 27.65 knots.

Like all great ladies, she was at her greatest in an emergency. In the World War she did magnificent service as a hospital ship and transport. And her greatest single record of 29 knots was set when she raced to the aid of a sinking freighter in 1926.

But, like most beauties, the old Mauretania had her weaknesses too. Perhaps she was a bit spoiled by admiration. Her devotees included the greatest of two continents but sometimes she treated them none too graciously. Her behavior was notoriously bad in heavy seas. And there are those who say that some of her greatness was purchased with too much of the sweat of her unsung stokers. Besides, she was, by contemporary standards, extravagant, and this was a sin that increased rather than diminished with age.

Thus, though the thriftier, oil-burning new Mauretania lacks some of the grace of her parent, though she has broken no records on her maiden voyage, still she has her own virtues to do honor to her proud and ancient family. After all, the moralists say, it is interior beauty that really counts. And, to judge by the description of her accommodations, the new Mauretania has plenty of that.

In The Creole State

Louisiana's seldom placid political situation has been whipped into new turmoil by the sudden resignation of Gov. Richard W. Leche.

The gubernatorial election is only six months off and the race has promised to be hot. For while the political machine built by the late Huey Long has been preserved almost intact, and continues to dominate the State, the "Kingfish" has had no real successor. This has made for a certain amount of rivalry among Huey Long's former lieutenants. At least two of them, one a bitter opponent of the Leche administration, recently announced their candidacies for the governorship.

Gov. Leche's resignation may throw a monkey wrench into the plans of these aspirants for high office. For one thing, by automatically elevating Lieut. Gov. Earl K. Long to the governorship, it tends to give the inside track in the gubernatorial race to this younger brother of Huey.

It seems doubtful, however, that this or any similar consideration motivated Gov. Leche in getting out nearly 11 months before the expiration of his term. It is certainly not impossible that his resignation was connected with the Federal investigation of WPA activities now under way in Louisiana.

So far, no results of this investigation have been made public. It is not clear whether the many charges of corruption and maladministration can be substantiated. But Gov. Leche's sudden resignation will do nothing to lessen suspicions that the WPA in the Creole State deserves a very thorough investigation.

After Eight Years

In view of the highly disturbing developments taking place at Tientsin, Swatow, Amoy and other Chinese treaty ports, it is well to recall that the present cycle of aggression began in the Far East almost eight years ago.

The first really significant challenge to the post-war peace system took place on September 18, 1931, when Japanese troops began the seizure of Manchuria. That high-handed action met with no effective resistance. No wonder, then, that, taking their cue from the Japanese, both Italy and Germany later defied the Western powers in Africa and Europe and managed to get away with it.

In some respects, no step hitherto taken by Japan in furtherance of its ambitions to dominate eastern Asia is as far-reaching as the present blockade of the British and French concessions at Tientsin. It is, to all intents and purposes, an act of war, if without the usual accompaniment of bloodshed. And, if successful, it will render very precarious the position in China not only of Great Britain and France but also of the United States.

Failure to make Japan observe her treaty commitments during these past eight years renders it the more difficult for the Western powers to resist illegal aggression now. Yet so keenly appreciated are the dangers of capitulation to Japan's high-handed policy at this time that everything possible is being done to avoid such a surrender.

Of course, there is much that Great Britain might do that she has not yet done. There are all manner of reprisals against Japan which are being held in abeyance. The British government has not only its Far Eastern position to take into account, but also the very grave European situation. Yet, by and large, Great Britain cannot be accused of any lack of firmness at Tientsin.

With business in the British and French concessions there at a standstill, with the food situation precarious and with Japan doing everything possible to make the lives of the inhabitants in the beleaguered zone intolerable, the British have nonetheless held their ground. Concurrently, they have refused to submit to the Japanese ultimatum that their warships leave Swatow, which Japan has just occupied. Instead, additional British men-of-war have been dispatched to that port.

The Japanese have concentrated their fire on the British because they hope, in that way, to be able to deal with the Western powers singly. Great Britain and the United States have no commitments for common action in the Far East or elsewhere. Nor has this Nation any intention of making such commitments. Yet even as our interests in the Far East run parallel with those of Great Britain, so our policy, perforce, must follow a parallel course with that of the other powers whose rights in China are imperiled by Japanese aggression.

That is why the United States has refused to adopt an attitude of indifference regarding what is going on at Tientsin. That is why the Administration has sent naval reinforcements to protect Americans at Swatow and has protested to Japan against the blockade of the International Settlement at Amoy.

It is probable that this show of resistance, not only by Great Britain but also by the United States, explains why the Japanese have not dared to go any further and faster than is the case. They are prepared, as the Tientsin episode shows, to court the anger of one Western power at a time. It is much more dangerous, and they know it, to arouse the hostility of several powers at once.

If, as is not unlikely, the situation is approaching a showdown in the Far East, the democracies are no longer showing the same readiness to retreat that has ruled during these last eight years. Belatedly and under extraordinarily difficult circumstances, resistance to aggression is consolidating.

Lou Gehrig

Thousands of words have been expended in efforts to emphasize the drama of the Gehrig story to an already convinced world. Columns were devoted this spring to his failing batting average and his ensuing voluntary retirement to the bench. Prophecies, analyses and dirges were all pronounced over his still very active figure.

"I hope the arrival of warm weather will enable me to hit my stride," Gehrig said, as he sat on the sidelines for the first time and watched the Yankees score a smashing victory over Detroit without him. Warm weather has brought not the return of its former greatest player to baseball but the reason for his slump and news of his permanent retirement from active play. In announcing that Gehrig is suffering from chronic infantile paralysis and has been for the last two years, Ed Barrows, president of the Yankees, added that only his remarkable physique enabled him to play at all of late.

For Gehrig himself the occasion may have been less sad than for his teammates. Here at last was the answer to the distressing slump in his batting. Not even advancing years, as all the scribes maintained, was responsible for the end of his record of 2,130 consecutive games. It took the persistent march of a cruel disease to slow his bat. There is an element of victory in this defeat. It is to be hoped that Gehrig's great spirit and broad experience are not lost to the game and that he will continue in an executive capacity with the team he did so much to make magnificent.

D. C. Facts And Fancies

The Congressional Record for Wednesday—published yesterday—contains a striking illustration of the misinformation regarding the District of Columbia, which is all too prevalent throughout the country and even, it may be hazarded, among some Congressmen who should know better.

The case in point is supplied by an editorial from the Daily Telegram of Adrian (Mich.), home town of Representative Michener. Since Mr. Michener is now serving his tenth term in Congress it can scarcely be said that he has not been in Washington long enough to understand the fiscal set-up of the municipality which he helps to govern here.

Yet very serious ignorance of Washington's government is revealed in the editorial from the Adrian paper, placed in the Congressional Record by Mr. Michener and defined by him as "timely" because of "the current local agitation in the District of Columbia concerning representation for the District in the Congress."

The editorial asserts that the complaint of "taxation without representation" has less weight in Washington than in any other American community because this city "does not really belong to its inhabitants." Most of these, the editorial says, come here gladly, "quite content to let themselves be governed by Congress through the District Commissioners." So far, so good; but this startling paragraph follows:

> And their confidence is well founded. The Commissioners are appointed by the President for 3-year terms and confirmed by the Senate. One is chosen from each major party and the third is an Army engineer. Such a commission ought to command confidence and give the city a good government, and, in fact, it has. Congress furnishes half the District's expenses, the other half being raised by local taxes. That seems quite fair to the residents. It is a bit hard for an outsider to see where they have any serious grievances.

If there were any truth in the assertion that "Congress furnishes half the District's expenses" it would indeed be "a bit hard for an outsider" to see where the grievance lies. Unfortunately, however, it is now 17 years since this ratio was in effect. It was during Representative Michener's second term in Congress that the proportion began to be changed to Washington's disadvantage. At the present time the city is furnishing about 88 per cent and the Federal Government about 12 per cent of the District's expenses.

That doesn't seem quite fair to the residents. And, judging by the handsome indorsement given the Overton formula by the Senate District Committee, it doesn't seem quite fair to those in Congress who have taken the trouble to inform themselves about the municipality which is subject to their control.

If there are any other Congressmen, veterans or newcomers, who still believe that "Congress furnishes half the District's expenses" it is to be hoped they will promptly investigate the basic facts. There is a good summary on pages 417-18 of the current Congressional Directory, furnished gratis to every Representative, though the percentage of the Federal contribution has dwindled even since that was written.

The Overton formula, which is all the District asks, would make the Federal contribution cover at most about one-fifth of the local budget. This being the case, it is decidedly untimely to find in the current Congressional Record the grossly inaccurate assertion that "Congress furnishes half the District's expenses."

Trades And The Man

Commencement exercises are not unusual occurrences at this time of year. But a graduation with more than ordinary news content took place the other night at nearby Cabin John. Not diplomas, but proficiency certificates in various trades were given the graduates, who were leaving Camp 333 of the CCC at the conclusion of their six months training.

Director Robert Fechner deserves credit for emphasizing on this, as on other occasions, the educational aspect of the CCC camps. Their primary objective, he said again at his Cabin John "commencement address," is to prepare young men to support themselves when they leave camp.

The modicum of military discipline involved is undoubtedly a valuable part of the CCC training. But the vocational training given and encouraged is more vital and must not be neglected if the institution is to preserve its wholly democratic and constructive aspect.

As usual, this has been an unusual spring.

Many a man has been burned by picking up a hot tip.

Seekings

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I seek the fastness of the wild, unstained by footfalls on the sod, nor by the hand of man defiled—where one may walk alone with God. I seek the stillness of the vale, untroubled by the changeful mind, unshadowed by life's weary trail—where one that perfect peace may find.

I seek the desert solitude, untraveled by the tread of man, unhaunted by the restless brood—where one the sense of soul may scan. I seek the mountain grandeur old, untarnished by the rust of time, unfelled by the usurper, gold—where one may soar on thoughts sublime.

I seek the ocean's majesty, unravished by inglorious war, the milestones of grim history—where one may vision things afar. I seek the beauty of the sky, untouched by man's imperfect hand, with hues that blend and vivify—where one true art may understand.

I seek the quiet of the stars, beyond the clangor and the din, that near the border's golden bars—where one may feel lost love akin. I seek the silence of the night, unbroken by the surging throng, in idle quest of rainbow light—where one may sing some master song.

Capital Taxes

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In The Post of June 20, I see a headline "D. C. Income Tax Faces Senate Ax." Knowing the need for adequate and just taxation for our voteless city, I feel that your paper should state clearly the danger which will attend failure to pass the bill in a good form (such as the House bill with minor amendments). A sales tax and the continuation of the unjust business tax will result from the present efforts in the Senate, and once again the Nation's Capital will be in the unenviable position of having a tax system obviously unfair to low income groups.

Carpenter Wages

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The Post editorial of June 13 on the carpenters' request for a higher rate of pay may be all you say, unjust, a setback on building operation and detrimental to the members of the union in selling this labor. Your editorial stresses the point of the unfairness of the request at this time, to the contractors in delaying building operations; you will, however, admit that this strike is legal according to a form of government we had in the past, in that the membership voted by majority rule to strike after their request was denied by the contractors.

When the present Administration came into power and the forgotten man was supposed to get a New Deal, he did. The carpenter and his fellow worker, the bricklayer, and all the governmental operations received a cut in pay. The carpenters' wages were reduced from $11 per day to $8, and the bricklayer's from $14 to $12 and, Mr. Editor, there was a law known as the Bacon-Davis act, supposed to protect even the nonunion worker. Nevertheless the wages were reduced and the Bacon-Davis act ignored. The Government officials had no objection to the violated law, and the contractors were satisfied. They figured on paying the higher rate, and had to pay only the lower. The carpenters and bricklayers had to accept. Duress was king for that day.

In conclusion let me say I hope the carpenters will reach a good businesslike agreement with the contractors, and they, the contractors, can appreciate how the carpenters felt when their wages were reduced. The shoe is on the other foot, and it seems to hurt.

Against The Relief Bill

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In your editorial on June 19 you suggest that the WPA bill passed by the House is a step in the right direction, but does not go far enough in eliminating, for example, "the boondoggling projects."

A reading of the bill should make it clear that the results of the $45,000 limit on all future projects will necessitate a change from the useful work now under way to the leaf-raking of 1933. In short, the bill promotes "boondoggling."

The elimination of the theater project and the virtual stop to the other arts projects will deprive thousands of unemployed professionals of their jobs. It would deprive every city in the country of a genuinely American cultural movement.

Finally, the restriction on the length of employment, forcing workers to take an unpaid vacation, delivers a cruel blow both to the efficiency of the program and to the morale of the workers. Why should Congress and the press treat these millions of unemployed as pariahs? Is there any more reason for forcing WPA employes to do certain useless work, or to leave their jobs after a certain number of months, than there is for the people in private industry to do so? Has not the WPA fully justified its appropriations by salvaging the skill, the health and the morale of millions of unemployed whom industry has rejected?

But that is not all. As a matter of common, smart business, anyone who is interested in the truth and not in a smear campaign, can look at the airports, the schools, the armories, etc., and see a ready answer to the badly worn arguments about "extravagance" and "inefficiency."

It is difficult to see how you could overlook these obvious defects in the bill passed by the House, and speak of a "change in the right direction."

IRVING RICHTER.
ANNA LOUISE JONES.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We step-children of Congress, the people of the District of Columbia, ought to be in the thick of the fight against the current attempt to curtail WPA. The slashes in relief contemplated by the Woodrum bill would swell by 2,500 the terribly large number of District citizens who are faced with starvation and want.

The direct attack on culture by the Woodrum bill which would wipe out the arts projects can only be applauded from a fascist, book-burning viewpoint. Unless the Senate kills this measure the District will lose its WPA art galleries, its orchestra and its writers' project, all of which have made notable contributions to local cultural life.

The facts of the District relief and unemployment situation call for an expanded and enlarged WPA, not for the Woodrum bill. D. C. citizens should immediately make this known to the Senate sub-committee on appropriations (would that I could write, "to their Senators"), which is now considering the bill.

Great And Good

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a letter to you signed by S. B. Moss, the following paragraph appears: "It would be interesting to know by what method Republicans such as Mark Sullivan, or former Democrats, such as Frank Kent, have access to the innermost thoughts and private conversations of Democratic leaders, etc."

I agree, it would. By the same token, it would be equally interesting to know by what method so many Democrats are able to tell us exactly what Jackson and Jefferson, for instance, would say and do were they living today.

As for America's "greatest President," I do not feel capable of dogmatically asserting that this man or that man was our greatest President. I am reminded of an old saying, "All that is great is not good, but all that is good is great." I feel that we have had many good Presidents.

Firm Stand

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Last spring during the crisis in Europe we noted with much interest and satisfaction the definite stand you took with respect to foreign affairs.

Your theory that a firm stand by the United States in the right direction will keep us and the world out of war is still good and the case in point is the situation in China.

The Japanese are of the opinion that America will not act until too late to interfere with their plans and that America generally is inclined to a "hands-off" attitude in respect to foreign affairs which are not understood very clearly. Nevertheless, we will find ourselves in the middle of things again as we did in 1917 unless we are prepared to advise Japan that in any moves affecting the peace of the world we are solidly with England and France.

It is quite possible that the incident in Tientsin has been deliberately planned in conjunction with German designs against Danzig and in respect to this, developments may be expected quite rapidly unless we continue the firm stand taken in April through Mr. Roosevelt's letter to the axis powers.

There is little doubt that unless Germany, Italy and Japan come to a realization that America will work with England for the maintenance of peace, that we may expect a continuance of serious incidents, one of which may bring about a military conflict either in the Orient or in Europe which will involve us all.

WILLIAM DE KRAFFT.

Economic System

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: You and I know that the policy of spending our way into prosperity is predicated upon a delusion. But the dear, innocent Senators and Representatives, animated by the saviour complex, nourish the idea that all the economic system needs is an injection of money.

Foundering of the economic system was an inside job, expedited by greedy capitalists, gambling public and gullible economists. Billions of new credit will not change essentials.

Conventional concepts no longer apply. Heavy taxation and Government interference are charged with obstructing capital investment. Reverse the terms and you have a better grasp of the situation. Heavy taxation and Government interference are the consequences of a miscarriage of the industrial method, furthered by attempted correction of faults in the mechanism of industry by financial means.

The Post Impressionist

Better And Better

FOR ALL OF US, I suppose, the word "reform" has a certain stigma attached to it, yet everyone is engaged in reform in some guise or other. Reform is perhaps the biggest business there is. Without it politicians would atrophy and religionists would go on relief. It has been a moving force in ecclesiastical history. It generated Protestantism. It has made us, for better or worse, what we are, today; but reforms don't just happen. There are always the reformers, the visionaries, the zealots, even the bigots, behind them, fighting to change man's ways. Fundamentally, however, man objects to being reformed, and even good reforms are usually accomplished only after long hard struggles.

And so reformers are roundly despised, although they may conceivably be benefactors of civilization. Especially vicious are those of the petty variety—those ameliorationists for whom there is nothing whatsoever that cannot be improved. A recent editorial in the Montana Record-Herald calls attention to a case of this class:

"We note with dismay a tendency in the household pages of the press to monkey with the pumpkin pie. One of the girls who gets up recipes for tasty provender suggests a coating of shredded coconut 'to give the old dish a new accent.' Another goes so far as to urge a topping of meringue—the ultimate humiliation for any pie. No one has advised mayonnaise, but it may be that this is saved for another year."

And do you remember the Jefferson nickel? Requiescat in pace. There was another case of reform gone wrong. The eminent artist, Vernon Howe Bailey, gives us a good account of this numismatical tampering:

"The original design for the reverse of the coin showed a portico of Monticello toward which, breaking its lines, a highly decorative tree inclined. To those who have seen Monticello in its setting of foliage, this expressed it perfectly, and to those who have a knowledge or appreciation of design it was an achievement. But this suggestive treatment was regarded as inadequate by someone in high office. It was decreed that more of the house must be shown—an entire facade, in fact, crowded across the coin. Thus for a beautiful conception a mediocre one was substituted, with a deplorable result."

These examples show into what narrow bypaths the way of the reformer leads. Yet, as I say, there is the tendency cropping out in each of us. We are all guilty according to our talents and opportunity. A New York columnist of my acquaintance has for years campaigned for visible house numbers. Another man I know has delegated himself the extracurricular task of seeing to it that no one dies intestate. And so it goes.

I once heard William Lyon Phelps give a good piece of advice to prospective reformers. "Never," he said, "try to improve your best friends." I suppose he would have included also one's immediate family; but heavens! What a fertile and unremote field for reformation lies under one's own roof! Didn't somebody once say that reform begins at home? It has, for instance, long been a passionate ambition of mine to arise early enough some morning to beat the Philistines of my household to the morning paper—that I may behold it once intact before it has been torn limb from limb, its mastheads crumpled, and the various sections scattered to the four corners of the living room by those, young and old, who must glumly start their day by reading the "funnies." Potentially, as neat a little piece of reform as one could wish for! (I wouldn't dare, of course, suggest that the comics themselves need reforming, but wouldn't it be wonderful if the "funnies" were really funny?)

Then there is the photographer problem. Perhaps I am walking down F street lost in blissful reverie, balancing my budget, or just window shopping, when all at once I step right into one, squash. It's too late—he got me. I hear a click, and something hands me a little rectangular yellow card, which I am supposed to send with 25 cents to get my picture. Although I have learned to walk on, nonchalantly and triumphantly and even loathsomely rejecting the ticket, it is pretty hard to remember the old injunction to live and let live. The old reformer's instinct seizes me.

There are also a lot of gastronomic evils that afflict mankind, and I should like to see a bevy of reformers let loose on them. I have thought some myself of having little cards printed with this inscription—

THERE IS LITTLE EXCUSE FOR TOMATO JUICE.

My idea would be to leave them at all public and private eating places that I visit. But, after all, there's no use becoming a nuisance, and I'd really hate to put myself in the same class with those anonymous tractarians who plaster the sides of their trailers, barns, silos and fences with such enjoiners as "Prepare to Meet Thy God."

May be it is, as Emerson says, that "every project in the history of reform, no matter how violent and surprising, is good when it is the dictate of a man's genius and constitution, but very dull and suspicious when adopted from another." At any rate, there is something anomalous and paradoxical about reform. We cannot escape its pervasiveness or its traditional stigma, yet, if we can employ reform with some discretion, it can serve us mighty well. It can be a friend or foe. I think we must regard reform with great tolerance and with something of the same spirit that Bert Leston Taylor regarded his friends in his New Year resolution:

From now until the new year ends,
This my resolve, and naught can swerve it:
I will not knock my various friends
Unless my various friends deserve it.

Fair Enough

By Westbrook Pegler

Life Ends At 45

IN THE NEW WORLD of society that I am planning youth will run everything and all persons over 45 or 50 will be retired on pensions from the state and excluded from the polls, as well as from public office, except that during the transition or take-over period retired individuals may be drafted to show the new crew how the damned thing works. After that period over-age men and women will be absolutely excluded from public affairs, because experience has shown that they are too conservative, too full of fears for their young and for themselves to permit of optimistic judgment. As a matter of fact, the old are just afraid they will lose their security under young management, and they pass their selfish apprehension off on the world as a desire to protect the young.

But don't you worry, pappy. You will be all right under young management. You just clean out your desk, turn over the combination of the safe and go on fishing or golfing or whatever. You and mom will get your checks regularly the first of every month, and don't be coming around the office saying, "Son, I wouldn't do this or that if I were you," because we are going to be terribly busy. We are going to town.

At 45 They Begin To Lose Their Vigor

YES, WE ARE going to retire the old ones from business, too. We haven't decided whether the age will be 45 or 50, but I'm in favor of 45. At that age they are just beginning to lose vigor and confidence, but they may still look pretty good and they put forth a special effort to impose their conservativeness on the world. They are the most cluttersome of all, the ones between 45 and 50. Beyond 50 they are still more conservative, but they haven't the pep to insist so much. They slap down easier beyond 50.

Now, about the voting and office-holding ages of those who will constitute the young world, or youth society, I am proposing that each generation shall have a full say in all affairs affecting its own time and the fullest possible privilege to ball up its own life. Then there will be no more of that yapping about generations which were thrown into the cauldron of war by their elders, generations who inherited a mismanaged and disordered world from unwise and guilty elders and generations which lost or, anyway, mislaid their souls.

Youth Will Declare, Fight Own Wars

THESE GENERATIONS are going to take full responsibility, and if they desire to hold a war for themselves it is going to be their party, and they can pick up the check or hang it on the spike, or whatever they want to do about it. And when it is over they needn't look accusingly at the old-timers and say, "You betrayed youth," because the elders can crack back, "I did no such a thing. I was away fishing at the time."

And if they make a God-awful bust-up of their government, politics and economy at home they better not come bratting around, as the youth crowd are doing today, with a squawk that the elders voted for Harding, Coolidge, Hoover, slums and poverty, because it is going to be on paper that they broke the jug.

But along about then the early crop of this new youth gang will begin to pick up their tackle and move out under the retirement law, and I dare say the new freshman class of citizens, politicians, soldiers and all will be tempted to blame them for something.

Buck Is Passed To New Generation

I WANT to be around fishing by a crick somewhere when that happens, just to hear the answer, because youth forgets that youth isn't permanent. I have seen one class do its stuff, never aware that it was youth or responsible for keeping the world in tidy shape and leaving the windows washed for the next tenants, but concerned only with living its own span and doing its best without self-conscious or self-important proclamations.

Some few members blamed the elders for the big war, but most of them figured that it was just one of those things. And, after the war, in voting for Harding and so forth they had no idea that they were creating poverty. Hell, why would they have wanted to create poverty? They were doing the best they could, and, anyway, that poverty has hit them as hard as it has hit youth.

Well, that is a rough idea of my plan. Youth is so smart I want to see youth do its stuff.

Japan's War Base—Manchuria

Army To Spend $270,000,000 For Strategic Railways

By Mark J. Ginsbourg.

Shanghai.

IN THE general staff offices in Tokyo and in the red-brick headquarters of the Kwantung army in Hsingking, Japanese military "brain-trusters" are placing finishing touches upon plans for the conversion of Manchuria into one of the world's most powerful war bases within the next two years.

The first move in this ambitious undertaking was made in mid-May, when the vast and under-populated provinces bordering on Russia were split into seven smaller administrative units, each headed by a Japanese.

The army's borderland plan provides for the expenditure of $270,000,000 by 1941, 60 per cent of this enormous sum to be spent for the construction of strategic railways, enabling Japan to bring troops to the Russo-Manchurian frontier from the major bases in the puppet empire and Japan proper within 48 hours.

The remaining $110,000,000 will be expended for the building of new towns and villages sprinkled along the border, for a web of airfields, for elaborate precautions against Soviet air raids, for the building of a "Maginot line" facing the frontier, and for the tapping of the rich resources of the borderlands.

AN IMPORTANT feature of the plan will be the intensification of the current drive to transplant rural Japan on Manchurian soil. Many thousands of young Japanese have already been shipped to the continent this year, after a course of intensive military and agricultural training. Like the Cossacks of Czarist Russia, these youths will be expected to till their fields with their rifles stacked within an arm's length. Real Russian Cossacks, whose hatred toward the Soviets is being carefully nurtured by Japanese agents, are already guarding the Three Rivers region, in the west. The young Nipponese settlers will be sent north and northeast, where a day without a border clash is a newsworthy event.

The new Japanese plan is a belated imitation of the scheme put into effect by the Soviets some six years ago. As far back as 1933, Moscow realized that it would be far easier to defend Siberia if the latter were an industrial center instead of an uninhabited tundra. Consequently, gold and manpower were poured into Siberia in an ever-increasing stream. Today, the Soviet Far East boasts of powerful military and mining industries, of numerous new towns, and of a net of strategically important motor roads and railways.

Simultaneously with the development of the borderland, the Japanese Kwantung army, which garrisons Manchuria, is pushing forward an ambitious five-year plan of industrial expansion.

MANCHURIA, it must be explained, has been the Kwantung army's "pet" ever since her amputation from China eight years ago.

While the success cannot yet be gauged, the puppet empire has been, and still remains, a vast experiment in national socialism, mapped out and directed by military experts from the Kwantung army headquarters.

IN ITS initial stages, the experiment was bitterly opposed by Japan's supertrusts, which could not allow military interference with the disposition of their investments and the size of their dividends. The army, however, won the bloodless battle when it brought Yoshisuke Aikawa, a sharp-witted and enterprising war millionaire, to develop Manchuria's war industries, and compelled Mr. Yosuke Matsuoka, the belligerent and independent Oregon-educated president of the South Manchuria Railway octopus, to give up his post to a figurehead.

Today, the capitalists grumble a little when they receive orders from the army to expand their plants beyond the profitable point, but obey. Thus, enormous automobile works, with an annual output of 30,000 cars (which will compete with the United States-made product), are about to start work, while millions of yen are being poured into the Tungpientao area, hailed as Manchuria's second Gary.

The ever-present conflict between the interests of the producers in Japan proper and in Manchuria also continues, with the Kwantung army making no concessions to the munitions makers of Kobe and Nagoya, and receiving no quarter from Japan.

An example: With an acute shortage of coal in Japan proper, Tokyo has decided to increase exports of Manchurian coal to Nippon's hungry heavy industries. The Kwantung army, on the other hand, needs coal for its own pet industrial projects in Manchuria. Consequently, to use the diplomatic wording of a semiofficial statement, "it is feared that it will be difficult to increase the supply of coal from Manchukuo to Japan."

THIS YEAR'S allotments of coal made by the Kwantung army showed enormous increases in the quotas of Manchuria's railways, metal (munitions) industries and "general consumption." The quota allotted to Japan's industries, on the other hand, was slashed by 400,000 tons.

Tokyo then came back with a threat to cut off the supplies of Japanese cement, timber, steel and "more than 10 other articles" from the Manchurian industries. The warning was delivered by the vice president of the powerful Manchurian Affairs Board of the Tokyo cabinet, on his return from a stormy tour of inspection of the puppet empire. Henceforth, he told the press, Manchuria will get only 80 per cent of the iron and steel she wants from Japan and only a half of other vital raw materials.

"Manchukuo," he added significantly, "will have to rearrange its commodity mobilization plan, reducing supply for civil consumption to some extent, except in the case of military demands."

THE KWANTUNG army did not long remain silent. It hit back at Tokyo through the important Japan-Manchukuo Businessmen's Association, which, at its conference in Hsingking, recently demanded the removal of all customs barriers between the two countries and "modification and revision" of the ban on Japanese exports to the puppet empire.

But the conference went even farther than that. Admiral Takuo Godo, one of the puppet state's "little dictators" and a great admirer of Herr Hitler, won the delegates' approval for his motion that the economic structures of Manchuria and of the seized areas in China should remain forever divorced.

Manchuria, he declared, must become a great industrial center, while China must continue to be an agricultural land, supplying raw materials to the mills of the puppet empire. This plan, however, agreeable to the Kwantung army, cannot but cause bitter resentment in Toyko, Osaka, Nagoya and other industrial cities of Japan proper.

With the investment prospects in China still uncertain, the Japanese supertrusts are, meanwhile, continuing to pour funds into Manchurian railways and heavy industries. Official figures on Japanese investments in Manchuria place the total for 1936-38 at 1,035,248,000 yen (approximately $280,000,000), of which 430,981,000 yen were invested in 1938, 341,272,000 in 1937 and 262,995,000 in 1936.

IN ADDITION to the industrialization of Manchuria, the Kwantung army is also actively pursuing a regimentation of the country's manpower. While plans are being drafted for universal compulsory military service a limited compulsory service is already in force. Of course, the Japanese will not arm every able-bodied Chinese in Manchuria, but the plan apparently is to mobilize labor for the expanding industries. This may help to alleviate the present very serious shortage of workers.

The Kwantung army ceased to take an active interest in the China war as soon as the hostilities extended beyond Tientsin and Peiping. To the "brain trusters" in Hsingking, the China war is a major blunder, which should be corrected as soon as possible, before it affects Japan's capacity for fighting Russia. The Kwantung army played an important role in the Japanese drive into Inner Mongolia but this thrust has been a part of the Kwantung army's strategical plan for the severance of Siberia from European Russia.

Thus, while Japan fights China, and puts pressure on the western powers at Tientsin, Swatow, Amoy and other treaty ports, the Kwantung army prepares for another and bigger war. How soon this war will break out no one can predict, but the commencement of hostilities will find the Kwantung army operating from a powerful and well-industrialized Manchurian base.

House Votes Farm Parity Payments

posal to increase farm tenant loans by $25,000,000 from the original House appropriation of $24,984,500. Over the protests of Majority Leader Rayburn and the Texas delegation, pink bollworm control was allotted the $446,800 first proposed by the House instead of the $1,366,800 asked by the Senate, while an effort to raise wild life restoration funds $500,000 to a total of $2,000,000 also was defeated.

Reversing their action last March, when they helped to defeat more moderate versions of the parity payment and surplus disposal provisions, members of the urban bloc were claiming after yesterday's vote that they were responsible for the large farm appropriation.

Intense behind-the-scenes discussions had been going on all day, beginning with a conference between Mayor F. H. LaGuardia, of New York, two or three New York and Chicago members of Congress, and a representative of the American Farm Bureau Federation powerful farm lobby, who reportedly pledged his assistance on the WPA if the city members would vote for parity payment and surplus disposal. The support of Chairman Jones of the Agriculture Committee also was said to have been enlisted for WPA.

Refuse to "Go Along"

However, a group of Pennsylvania urban Democrats, led by Representative Bradley, refused to "go along" with the farm bill on the grounds that they had not received sufficient assurances from the leadership to guarantee House acceptance of whatever liberalizing changes the Senate may make in the relief bill. Majority Leader Rayburn refused to comment on Bradley's statement.

Airlines Still Must Pioneer, Official Asserts

Airlines still have a pioneering job of selling air travel, Charles H. Rheinstrom, vice president in charge of sales, American Airlines, told 750 persons at the Mayflower Hotel Tuesday night.

Rheinstrom, who discussed air travel in an illustrated lecture preceding a party given by American Airlines, declared the major job facing airlines is that of inducing people to take their first trips by air.

Among the guests were Rear Admiral Emory S. Land, chairman of the Maritime Commission; Senator and Mrs. McCarran, of Nevada; Senator Capper, of Kansas; D. Walter Swan, of United Airlines; Donald Duff, of Pennsylvania-Central Airlines, and William Briggs, of Eastern Airlines. Herbert D. Ford, District manager of American Airlines, presided.

Helvering May Resign As Revenue Chief

Treasury sources indicated yesterday that Internal Revenue Commissioner Guy W. Helvering plans to resign his post soon, unless his health improves.

Helvering has been absent from his desk through illness for several weeks in the past six months. In event he resigns, Harold N. Graves, of Illinois, was mentioned as a likely successor.

Doctors Report Sulfanilamide Smothers Germs

Milwaukee, June 22 (AP).—The new drug, sulfanilamide, smothers disease germs in the human body.

The discovery of the queer trick by which it does this was reported to the medical section of the American Association for the Advancement of Science yesterday by Drs. Ralph R. Mellon and Lawrence E. Shinn, of Pittsburgh.

Sulfanilamide, made from a red dye and first used as a medicine in 1935, has been this century's chief medical sensation. Successively it has become the best medicine for blood poisoning, pneumonia, meningitis, erysipelas, gonorrhea and a dozen other diseases.

There has been great mystery as to how it could be effective against such completely different diseases. The germs are not the same, but the diseases sulfanilamide cures have one common trait. The germs get their oxygen from hydrogen peroxide with the aid of an enzyme known as catalase.

Sulfanilamide, the Pittsburghers said, destroys this enzyme. Lacking it, the germs cannot manufacture enough hydrogen peroxide. They are weakened until the body's natural defenses are able to destroy them.

Rail Equipment Plan

THE PLAN to help the railroads acquire new equipment, first put forth more than a year ago by Marriner S. Eccles, chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, is at last receiving serious consideration in the Roosevelt Administration. It was included in the new plan for self-liquidating loans and investments recently sent to the White House with the indorsement of Henry Morgenthau, jr., Secretary of the Treasury. The President has now directed the Department of Commerce to find out what railroad executives and railway equipment manufacturers think of it.

The plan is simple. The Government would set up a United States Railroad Equipment Authority with power to buy engines and freight cars and perhaps passenger cars and to rent them to railroads on short-term leases, with options to buy. The authority could get its money from the Treasury direct or by selling its own notes, backed by a Treasury guarantee.

Two questions immediately spring to mind: Do the railroads need new rolling stock? If they do, why is this plan better than letting them buy what they need in the usual way?

AS TO NEED, the railroads as a whole have enough freight cars for present traffic. They have fewer, however, than at any time in more than 30 years. Heavy retirements during the last several years have brought the car surplus down to the point where sharp recovery in general business would cause a car shortage.

Moreover, almost half the freight cars now owned by the Class I lines have reached the ripe age of 20 years, where repair costs begin to mount rapidly, and about one-quarter are more than 25 years old.

Government economists have estimated tentatively that if we get back to the 1929 level of general business during the next three years, about 600,000 new freight cars will be needed—half to replace cars that will have to be scrapped during the next three years and half to add to the total supply.

AS TO THE POTENTIAL need for new locomotives there appear to be differences of opinion between the railroads and the equipment manufacturers. Enough locomotives are on hand to take care of a considerable increase in traffic. But a high percentage are old; the equipment companies say they are obsolete and that it would pay the railroads to replace them with more efficient models. As a conservative guess, Administration economists say that from 600 to 900 new locomotives a year would be needed in the event of marked recovery. Last year the railroads bought only 36 steam locomotives, although they bought more than 200 of other types, especially the Diesel type used on streamlined passenger trains.

Adding everything together the tentative estimate is that, if there is a sustained rise in general business, the railroads will need at least $800,000,000 worth of new rolling stock by the end of 1941.

Why not let the railroads buy their equipment as they need it? One obvious answer is that so many of them are in bankruptcy, or on the verge of it, that they have neither the cash nor the credit. Generally speaking, roads which are most in need of new rolling stock are in the poorest position to obtain it.

SOME ROADS are relying heavily on the surplus equipment which they rent from other roads. The standard rental for a freight car is $1 a day. It is estimated that the proposed Railroad Equipment Authority could rent brand-new cars at 60 cents per car per day each, or 40 cents if the eventual repair charges could be imposed on the railroads.

The authority, it is argued, could save money in three ways. First, because it could borrow money cheaply; the idea would be to obtain funds by selling short-term securities at extremely low interest rates. Secondly, by getting lower prices from the equipment makers. The authority would not only be a larger buyer; it could manage its buying so as to provide a steadier market for the manufacturers, who are now in the feast-or-famine class. The result ought to be lower unit costs and prices. Thirdly, if the railroad authority were given money for research, progressive improvements and lowerings of costs might be expected over a period of years.

Under the rental plan, the Government would not become entangled in the financial structures of the roads.

A spur to equipment buying might be given by a reduction in RFC interest rates. But this alternative does not offer the economies and flexibility of the rental plan. Nor would it produce the volume of buying—and therefore of general recovery—which is hoped for, and believed necessary, by the authors of the authority plan.

Arms And Neutrality

By Henry Carter

An Anti-Administration Viewpoint

IN RECENT public statements regarding the Administration's amendment of the neutrality act to permit the sale of arms and ammunition to belligerent nations, Administration spokesmen such as Secretary Hull and Senator Pittman have advanced the argument that there is no logical difference between the selling of such articles as high explosives and machine guns, and the selling of commodities like wheat, cotton, motor cars, or typewriters.

Therefore, they say, unless we are prepared to forego exporting our cotton and our wheat, logic compels us to abandon our present policy of regarding the sale of arms to belligerents as unneutral and to adopt instead a policy of selling arms to belligerents just as we would permit the sale to them of cotton shirting, wheat flour, or canned peaches.

This argument, it is submitted, is specious, sophistical and dangerous nonsense. It is based on a premise which is false in history and false in fact.

THE FACT is that arms and ammunition are by their nature highly specialized commodities, which are specifically and primarily designed for the destruction of human life and the destruction of property, and which are adaptable to very little else. As such they have a very special status in commerce, a status which is fundamentally different from that of the ordinary objects of trade which are useful in peace as well as in war.

This fundamental difference of character between arms and other objects of trade has been recognized throughout the history of international law in the form of the distinction made between absolute contraband and conditional contraband of war. A neutral shipping arms to a belligerent has always done so at his own risk. The arms he ships are subject to seizure and forfeiture as absolute contraband of war by other belligerents. His government is unable to protest such seizure without incurring the charge that by seeking to protect the unneutral conduct of one of its citizens it is itself acting unneutrally.

All the more fully is this charge incurred when the government itself is the moving force in the shipment of arms. In such cases a government which seeks to arm one belligerent as against another is generally regarded as acting unneutrally and as inviting by its own act the possibility of warlike reprisal on the part of the offended nation. As in 1917, a nation which fails in the performance of its neutral duties may well find itself involved in a war which a more meticulous observance of neutrality might have avoided, a danger which will not be escaped by trick transfers of title which deceive no one.

AGAINST THIS, the right of a neutral to ship ordinary articles of commerce to belligerent nations has always existed on an entirely different footing. In theory, such shipments are immune from seizure, provided it can be shown they are not destined for use by the armed forces of a belligerent. And in practice neutrals have been successful in maintaining this right, depending on their military and naval strength and their determination to assert their rights as neutrals. Mr. Hull himself has justified a recent loan to invaded China on the ground that it would not be used for belligerent purposes and has apparently succeeded in imposing his point of view upon Japan in this instance.

It is true that in recent years the development of war on a "total" scale has largely obliterated most outward distinctions in the treatment of absolute contraband and that of conditional contraband. Nevertheless the mere fact that absolute and conditional contraband are often treated alike in modern warfare does not make them alike in fact, or affect the fundamental difference in their nature.

Arms and ammunition are fundamentally different from other articles of commerce, no matter how the contraband lists of warring nations may read. To maintain that they are not is to ignore both history and common sense: as well say that a bushel of grain and a quart of rye whisky are essentially one and the same thing. They are not the same thing by nature and cannot be made so by fiat with any profitable result.

Secretary Hull and Senator Pittman presumably know this; to think otherwise would be to insult their intelligence. But if they do know it, surely they should not allow themselves to be used to confuse our thinking at a time when we are weighing the grave issues of war and peace which are involved in the Administration's current attempt to scrap neutrality as an effective national policy of the United States.

A very serious alteration of national policy is under consideration. It should be decided on the basis of truth and facts, not upon glib demonstrations that black is white.

The Once Over

By H. I. Phillips

Atlantic Crossing: 1945

"Tea?" asked the steward of the 11:05 express plane to Europe.

"Have we taken off?"

"Oh, yes, sir; we've been out an hour already."

"No tea then; there won't be time for it."

"Is this your first crossing?" asked the middle-aged woman who made friends with everybody.

"No. This is my fifteenth."

"Fifteen crossings in one lifetime!" she exclaimed, with obvious admiration.

"Life, my eye. Fifteen this month!"

"Oh," she said.

"Have a drink?" suggested the little man in the plus fours.

"We won't be able to get it on this crossing."

"What makes you think so?"

"Just before we took off a passenger asked the bartender to make him a planter's punch. You know how long it takes to make those things."

"Guess you're right," said the little man.

"Anybody you know aboard?" asked the man with the green hat and funny feather in it.

"Seven or eight people I've crossed with before, but I can't say I know 'em."

"Not the sort to strike up acquaintances," he suggested.

"It's not that. But I've only crossed with them about six round trips, which means I've only been thrown together with them a few short, hurried hours."

"I like the old days of steamship travel. You could get to know people on a single crossing," he said.

"Say," chirped the young woman in the sports clothes a little later, "some crowd you had to see you off on this trip!"

"Did you notice it?"

"Yes," she replied. "What was all the noise about?"

"It was quite a mixup. Those people at the airport were really there to see me off on my previous trip."

A violinist suddenly stood up on a platform and struck one single note, after which he bowed, put his instrument away and hurried off.

"What was that?" asked the gentleman who was making his first crossing.

"Ship's concert," I explained.

"But he only played one note."

Senate Passes Tax Revision Bill

would have brought some 1,500,000 additional persons under the income tax laws.

While expressing sympathy with the income tax broadening principle, Harrison contended the pending bill was primarily designed to provide tax relief and should not be opened to additional taxes. Only last week, President Roosevelt had favored a slight increase in middle bracket taxes and some lowering of exemptions, adding he did not expect action this year. House Ways and Means Chairman Doughton said last night the proposals were "bound to figure" in next year's tax revision studies.

LaFollette argued Congress must choose now between "uncontrolled inflation" or "the more difficult and courageous course" of levying added taxes to maintain the Nation's credit. He said Congress had raised taxes on high bracket incomes over $50,000 but had failed to levy proportionate increases on large incomes under $50,000. Similarly he urged that low income wage earners should pay their fair share of the burden. "though this should not be carried to absurd extremes where cost of collections exceeds the yields."

He was supported by Senator Maloney (Democrat), of Connecticut, who said the proposal would make all citizens "tax conscious and aware of their responsibilities as citizens. Senator Vandenberg (Republican), of Michigan, likewise argued that the cost of spending would be driven home to the public.

An amendment to make all future Federal security issues taxable was offered by Senator Lee (Democrat), of Oklahoma, but later withdrawn. President Roosevelt has recommended that tax exemptions be removed from all future public security issues, and the House Ways and Means Committee has scheduled hearings opening next Wednesday.

Added to the bill were amendments by Senator Danaher (Republican), of Connecticut, to prohibit sale of lists of income tax payers earning $15,000 or more, made by the Ways and Means Committee, and an amendment by Senator Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts, adding Guam and American Samoa to the list of American possessions allowed an 80 per cent credit against the Federal estate tax.

Outstanding Senate committee changes approved granted firms forced to organize foreign subsidiaries the right to file consolidated tax returns, revived for six months permission to seek processing tax refunds, authorized persons receiving lump sum payments for five years or more personal services to spread their income over the entire period for tax purposes, and established the so-called "last in, first out" inventory rule of computing profits of merchants for taxation.

9 Children Hurt by Cars In District

Van Duzer Urges Drivers to Look Out For Youths; 5 onWay To Picnic Injured

On the heels of a plea by Traffic Director Van Duzer that motorists look out for children freed from school, nine youngsters were injured yesterday in District traffic, five in one crash.

They were:

John Addison, 9, of 3522 Porter street northwest; Joseph Murphy, 15, of 75 Observatory Circle northwest; Eleanor Hall, 12, of 3415 Porter street northwest; Robert O. Carter, 9, of 4215 Thirty-eighth street northwest, and Mary K. Addison, 17, of 3522 Porter street northwest, all riding in an automobile which skidded and overturned at Forty-sixth street and Massachusetts avenue northwest. None was seriously hurt.

Allen C. Harder, 12, of 4012 Third street northwest, taken to Garfield Hospital with severe lacerations and shock after his scooter collided with an automobile near his home.

Marvin Mayhugh, 3½, of 704 Third street northwest, received head injuries apparently when struck by a hit-run automobile near his home.

George Artman, 14, of 1228 E street southeast, cut about the chest and arms when his bicycle was in collision with a taxicab at Fourteenth and G streets northwest.

Two Adults Hurt

With the five children injured on Massachusetts avenue were Mrs. Sue Addison, 49, and Mrs. Marion L. Carter, both of whom were hurt. The party was on its way to Glen Echo for a picnic.

Earlier, Van Duzer, reminding motorists that the end of the school year sent a large number of children to the streets all during the day, urged greater caution at intersections and slower speeds in the vicinity of playgrounds.

"While at play," the traffic director said "children's thoughts are far from automobiles and danger. It is doubly necessary, therefore, for every motorist to constantly be on the lookout. We don't want to repeat the tragic toll of child casualties which occurred soon after schools were dismissed last year."

Fatalities Up Over 1938

Traffic Department records, Van Duzer pointed out, show that during the first five months of this year, six more persons have been killed in traffic than during the corresponding period last year. Of the total number killed since January, there has been an increase of 6 in pedestrian deaths and 2 in child fatalities.

Four children were killed between January and May in 1938 and that number has jumped to six this year. Ages range from 6 to 12 years, with the majority of fatal injuries occurring between intersections.

Meanwhile, Frederick G. Weismiller, a District fireman, was acquitted of a negligent homicide charge in the Police Court by the directed verdict of Judge Curran.

Judge Curran ruled that the Government had failed to prove any negligence. Weismiller, who lives at 206 Twelfth street southeast, was tried in connection with the traffic death April 2 of Oscar H. Schmidt, 69, of 206 East Capitol street.

Gaming Charged To 3 After Raid On Newsstand

Charges of setting up a gaming table were placed against three men yesterday when Third Precinct police, led by Capt. Arthur Miller, raided a newsstand in the 600 block of Seventh street northwest.

Two radios, scratch sheets and a quantity of alleged numbers slips were found in the establishment, it was said.

Bandit Strikes Store Owner and Son, 11, in Holdup

After one of their number had struck with his fist the proprietor and his 11-year-old son, three bandits last night robbed a grocery store at 4400 Georgia avenue of $65.

The holdup men entered just as Leon Rassin was closing his store for the night. In the store were his wife, Thelma, and his son, Sidney. All three were forced into a rear hallway while the cash register was being rifled.

A witness pursued the men for almost a mile but lost them in heavy traffic.

Mrs. John Ditzler Burial to Be Today At Glenwood

Last rites for Mrs. Frances Ditzler, 83, wife of the late John H. Ditzler, building contractor, who died Wednesday after a week's illness, will be held at 2 p. m. today in Chambers funeral home. Burial will be in Glenwood Cemetery.

A resident of Washington for 43 years, Mrs. Ditzler was born in Kennett Square, Pa. She lived here at 2115 First street northwest.

Prince Georges HOLC Aide Is Missing

Police Seeking Albert Bryan, Jr., Gone Since May 17

Albert E. Bryan, jr., 31, of Takoma Park, an HOLC official, has been missing since May 17, Prince Georges County police reported yesterday.

BRYAN

Mr. and Mrs. Bryan told police their son went to the races at Charles Town, W. Va., on the day he disappeared and was seen by a Takoma Park resident on the train returning to Washington. They were unable to find out whether he left the train at the Silver Spring stop or continued through.

Another baffling angle was the discovery of Bryan's automobile on the outskirts of Baltimore several days later. He was employed as field respresentative of the HOLC in Baltimore, but so far as could be learned, was not in Baltimore the day of his disappearance.

The missing man was in charge of the HOLC regional office at Hyattsville prior to being transferred to Baltimore several months ago. He lived with his parents at 627 Elm avenue, Takoma Park. His father is a former justice of the peace.

Police said Bryan is 5 feet 5 inches tall, weighs 205 pounds, and has blue eyes and light brown hair. He is known by the nickname of "Megs."

U. S. Tells How To Be Happy And Fit at Sea

For rail-shy ocean travelers who would just as soon maintain their hale and hearty status on shipboard the Public Health Service yesterday had several do's and don'ts to nail over the cabin door.

After frankly pointing out that the old dictum that holds that seasickness has no real remedy but never causes death is incorrect—"severe seasickness may cause death through exaggerating existing organic disorders"—the Health Service advised:

Get together with the ship in question several hours before sailing, so that through acquaintance with its more tangible features (such as ship odors) you will get your sea legs, if they are to be had.

Avoid the footsteps of others now sadder and wiser and talk about seasickness only to the ship doctor.

Take only the remedies prescribed by him (not by that of the kindly old lady in the fourth deck chair).

Take it easy before sailing, so that you will have at least an even break when you "walk the plank" on sailing.

And if you feel your years or don't feel too good, anyway—stay home.

Credit Men Elect

Abe Coonin, of 4104 Fourteenth street northwest, was elected a director at large of the National Association of Retail Credit Men at a convention yesterday in San Francisco. Other officers were Robert A. Ross, of Dallas, Tex., president; Erwin Kant, of Milwaukee, first vice president, and H. E. Armstrong, of New York; C. F. Basler, of Omaha, and Hubert Fielder, of New Orleans, directors at large.

Three Graduates of D. C. Area Get Marine Corps Commissions

JONES

Two From U. of Maryland and One Youth From V. M. I. Become Second Lieutenants; Chosen From Hundreds of R. O. T. C. Men

Three recent college graduates who live in Washington's environs will receive appointments as second lieutenants in the Marine Corps July 1, it was announced yesterday.

Selected with 30 others for the appointments, the young men were chosen from among several hundred graduates of Army and Navy R. O. T. C. courses at universities throughout the country. They are Lewis Arthur Jones, of College Park, Md.; Richard Donald Strickler, of Arlington, Va., and Elliott Brightwood Robertson, of Bethesda, Md.

Jones, a graduate of this year's class at the University of Maryland, is the son of Maj. and Mrs. C. H. Jones, of 1 Beechwood road. Maj. Jones is the regular Army instructor of military science and tactics at the university.

Now on active duty with the Army Reserve at Fort George G. Meade, Jones was cadet major in the R. O. T. C. at Maryland, was secreary-treasurer of the inter-fraternity council, vice president of Phi Sigma Phi, and a member of the varsity track team. He is 23.

Strickler, son of Mr. and Mrs. W. L. Strickler, of 985 N. Frederick street, was graduated from Virginia Military Institute a few days ago. At V. M. I. young Strickler, 23, won the highest honors a cadet may receive—the Cincinnati medal for efficiency of service and excellence of character. A graduate of Washington and Lee High School, Strickler this year captained a company at the institute which won the Garnett Andrews Cup.

Robertson, 22, is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel T. Robertson, of 115 Fairmont avenue, Bethesda. His father is a builder and real estate dealer and active in the Bethesda Volunteer Fire Department.

He is a native of Bethesda, attended the Bethesda Elementary School and Bethesda-Chevy Chase High School and was graduated in engineering at the University of Maryland. He was a cadet captain at the university and a member of Sigma Nu and Scabbard & Blade, honorary military society. He is attending reserve officers training camp at Fort Meade.

William Waters, War Veteran, Dies At Oteen Hospital

Funeral rites for William Frank Waters, 47, a World War veteran, who died Wednesday in the U. S. Veterans' Hospital, Oteen, N. C., after a long illness, will be held at 11 a. m. tomorrow at Fort Myer Chapel. Burial will be in Arlington Cemetery.

A native of St. Marys County, Md., Mr. Waters was educated in schools in Leonardtown. Volunteering in the Army at this country's entrance in the World War, he served overseas during the duration of hostilities.

Mr. Waters, who lived here at the Portner Apartments, is survived by a sister, Mrs. Mary Jackson, of Baltimore.

Director Finds D. C. Singers Rehearsing Opera 'Not So Bad'

Mme. Conti Calls Them Timorous, However, and Wishes She Had More Tenors and Altos; Chances Still Open

Thirty young District singers with hopes last night shook the rafters of a Hay-Adams music room in their first rehearsal for a Washington-staffed grand opera, and in the words of their director "weren't so bad."

Although big-name stars will sing the leading roles in the opera to be produced in January, the other solo parts and the entire male and female choruses are to be made up of Capital musicians with no opera experience.

After leading the choruses through the scores of "Cavalleria Rusticana," Amelia Conti, former harpist with the Metropolitan and Chicago Civic Opera, praised the "local talent."

Explaining that "I have played with Toscannini and Saint Saens—and now I conduct a chorus!" Mme. Conti yesterday indicated she was not displeased with her new role among the Capital musicians.

"There are many good voices, but they seem timorous. I suppose they are not used to a conductor's ways, but they'll get used to me."

Mme. Conti's only complaint was that there was an apparent dearth of certain types of voices in the District. "With all your choral societies here, there still don't seem to be many good tenors or contraltos," she asserted.

Opportunity for 20 more Washington amateurs with operatic aspirations remains, it was said. Auditions are to be held to fill out an ultimate chorus of 50 before the curtain rings upon "Cavalleria," "Tosca" and other works next year.

Police of Capital And 3 States Seek Missing Boy, 14

KEMP

The boy, son of Gilmer Randolph, a clerk in the procurement division of the Treasury Department, would have gone to summer school in a few weeks, relatives said. He was reported to have been seen on a truck near Fredericksburg, Va., a few hours after he was believed to have left home. Authorities were told his bicycle was in the rear of the truck, which was headed south.

His parents, who left Washington Tuesday to join searchers in Virginia and North Carolina, said he was 5 feet 7 inches tall, weighed 130 pounds and had blue eyes and brown hair.

Dies of Injuries

Herbert H. Tanner, 28, of 218 Jefferson street northwest, died yesterday in Vineland, N. J., of injuries suffered in an accident on the Harding highway in Newfield, N. J., the Associated Press reported.

He was employed here by the Giant Food Stores and was a native of St. Petersburg, Fla.

Colorado Found To Be Man's Home 25,000 Years Ago

Excavations made in Colorado under auspices of the Smithsonian Institution produced evidence that man lived on this continent between 10,000 and 25,000 years ago, the American Association for the Advancement of Science was told yesterday.

Addressing the association's Milwaukee meeting, Drs. Kirk Bryan and Louis L. Ray, of Harvard University, said they have dated the Lindenmeier site in northeastern Colorado as equivalent in age to the third Wisconsin glacial substage at the end of the glacial advance, which is estimated to have occured 250 centuries ago.

"There is a tendency to substitute an ideal of security for an ideal of liberty," Dr. Leverett S. Lyon, of the Brookings Institution, told the association in a lecture on "The Role of Government in the Economic System."

"In the public mind," he said, "there is a diminished belief in the reliance that can be placed on private enterprise to yield the maximum national income. The tendency is to substitute governmental action, not only to produce directly, but increasingly to 'manage' the private system. There appears to be a diminished interest in individual freedom as an end in itself."

Downtown Playground Site Sought

Planning Commission Directs Study of 3 Locations; Project Long Demanded

A part of the $1,000,000 Congress gave it to spend in 1939-40 on land acquisition will be used to buy a site for the downtown area's first adequate playground, the National Capital Park and Planning Commission decided yesterday.

The only thing that can stymie the program, long demanded by social and welfare agencies, is exorbitant land prices. The $1,000,000 appropriation must pay for several other projects and prohibitive ground costs would wreck the plans.

According to Thomas S. Settle, secretary, the commission directed its city planners, Charles Herrick and John Nolen, jr., to make an intensive study of three separate sites in the mid-city area and submit a report at the next monthly meeting. None of the sites was divulged.

Discuss Slum Dwellings

The commission's action came after it heard Herrick and Nolen discuss slum dwellings, traffic accidents and other factors having a bearing upon recreational opportunities. None of their findings was disclosed, all sessions of the planning body being executive.

Settle said, however, that the section covered in their report is bounded by Constitution avenue and First, Twelfth and U streets. Whether the prospective playground will be for white or colored children is still undecided.

The commission approved revised plans, submitted by the Alley Dwelling Authority, for low rent housing developments in Navy place southwest and Alabama avenue southeast, the first for colored and the second for white occupancy.

Would Erase "Paper Streets"

A resolution was adopted calling on the District Commissioners to erase from the official map of the city those "paper streets," existing only on paper, which theoretically run through park property. The zoning commission also was asked to amend its regulations to prevent construction of freakish or abnormally small dwellings in first-class residential zones.

In the afternoon the planners went on an inspection trip in the northwest rectangle, from Twenty-first street to the Potomac River between Constitution avenue and F street, where the new homes of the War and Navy Departments will be built.

Architectural and land-use plans for the two service buildings, as well as those for the new public library building to be erected at Fourth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, will be considered jointly today with the Fine Arts Commission.

Mrs. Emmet Gudger May Become Montana Delegate to Convention

By Hope Ridings Miller,
The Post Society Editor.

THE NATIONAL CONVENTIONS, Republican and Democratic, are a year away; but names of potential delegates already are looming on the horizon. Out Montana way, for example, rumors are flying thick and fast that a former Washington resident, Mrs. Emmet C. Gudger, is being urged on all sides to let her name be submitted for appointment as Democratic convention delegate from Montana, and as that State's Democratic national committee woman.

Sounds plausible. The daughter of the late Senator and Mrs. Thomas F. Walsh, of Montana, Mrs. Gudger has politics in the blood and a host of friends both in Washington and Montana who would back her to the last notch for one job or the other, or both.

SOME MONTHS AGO a number of her father's old friends hit on the thought that she would be an ideal candidate for delegate since Senator Walsh was a beloved and important fixture at many past conventions and since her mother also was a power in Montana politics for many years.

I heard then that around 20 of the State's leading Democrats were sounded out on the proposition and that every one came through with a hearty promise to support her. At first Mrs. Gudger demurred—she's not a you-offer-and-I'll-take-it type, but when urged more strongly, she agreed to take the idea under consideration.

LATEST REPORTS are that she has decided to throw her hat in the ring—or rather let her friends do it for her—and that there's more than a good chance she will be in the front row of delegates when the Democratic convention rolls around next year.

I haven't been able to check the rumor with Mrs. Gudger herself. She left last month for the West and is now making a series of visits through Montana and neighboring territory. She spent last week-end in Sheridan, Wyo., as the guest of Mrs. John B. Kendrick, widow of late Senator Kendrick. Many Washingtonians will remember that for years the Walshes, Gudgers and Kendricks resided in the same apartment house at 2400 Sixteenth street.

THIS WEEK Mrs. Gudger has been renewing acquaintances in Billings, Livingston, Butte and Missoula, Mont., en route to her summer home on Lake McDonald, in Glacier National Park.

Meanwhile, reports floating into Washington indicate that the current Democratic committee woman, Mrs. Edith R. Battey, of Billings, is planning to resign her post sometime soon and that Mrs. Gudger will be offered the job.

Probably the best known woman in the State, she has been closely identified with the political scene ever since she served as her father's Capital hostess for almost 20 years and took an active part in his last two campaigns.

MRS. GUDGER'S mother was a noted figure in political and club circles in Montana. For year's she was president of the State Federation of Women's Clubs and in the last race of the late President Wilson, she won for him the woman's vote in her State.

That an aura of power still lingers around Walsh relationships in Montana is borne out by the fact that in recent years various topflight candidates supported by Mrs. Gudger have been elected by big majorities.

Although as a Navy wife she has been a popular Capital hostess for many seasons, she has managed to spend about four months of every year in her home State, and has always voted there.

WHEN SHE PACKED her household effects last month and departed with her younger daughter, Gloria, for the West, she left a long record of successful accomplishments. Last winter she launched a debutante daughter, Miss Elinor Gudger, at a mammoth reception that brought Capital society out in droves. Early the past spring, she efficiently handled publicity for the annual ball of the Navy Relief Society, and that no sooner was out of the way than she plunged into the task of being committee chairman for the annual spring fete of the Women's National Democratic Club.

Her many Washington friends know that anything Genevieve Walsh agrees to do invariably goes across with a bang. So if she really is a candidate for appointment as delegate to the Democratic convention—well, certainly she would do the job as few persons could.

MRS. WILLIAM BION MOORE

Miss Helen Merritt Married To Mr. Moore at Epiphany

Couple Goes on Wedding Trip to Niagara Falls and Canada, Before Continuing On to Denver, Where They Will Reside

Wearing a gown of imported Chantilly lace, Miss Helen Christine Merritt, daughter of Robert Gwathmey Merritt and Mrs. Peterson Merritt, of Washington, was married last evening at 8 o'clock to William Bion Moore, son of Mrs. Vera Idol Moore, of this city. Their marriage was solemnized at Epiphany Church. The Rev. ZeBarney T. Phillips, who officiated, was assisted by the Rev. J. Gillespie Armstrong. White flowers and lighted candles decorated the altar.

The bride was given in marriage by her father. Graduated ruffles formed the train of her gown, and her fingertip veil was held to a cluster of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of white larkspur and lilies of the valley.

Miss Eleanor Idol, maid of honor, wore embroideried peach marquisette and a matching hat of peach maline. She carried pink larkspur and blue delphinium. The bride's sister, Miss Elise Wickes Merritt, was junior maid of honor, and was attired in blue taffeta with a hat to match. Her bouquet was an old-fashioned nosegay of sweetheart roses and baby's breath. Allen C. Fisher was best man. Ushers were John C. Leavitt, Gordon Roberts, Dudley Snyder and E. D. Dimmitt.

A reception for members of the two families followed the ceremony. Mrs. Merritt wore powder blue mousseline de soie and lace, with a hat to match, and the bridegroom's mother had chosen black shadow lace with a hat of the same shade. The house was decorated with summer flowers.

When she left for her honeymoon the bride was wearing a navy blue sheer frock with a matching hat and patent leather accessories. The couple will visit Niagara Falls and Canada before going on to Denver, where they will make their home.

Mrs. Moore is a graduate of the Misses Eastman's School, Wilson Teachers College and Maryland University. She did postgraduate work at Duke University. The bridegroom is a graduate of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and received his M. A. from Yale. He is associated with the Federal Power Commission in Denver.

French Envoy Is Ranking Guest At Luncheon

The French Ambassador, Count de Saint-Quentin, was the ranking guest at a luncheon given yesterday at the Mayflower by Francis B. Sayre and George S. Messersmith, Assistant Secretaries of State, in compliment to M. Leon Marchal, chief of the Service of Commerce and Industry of the French Residency General in Morocco.

Jacques Truelle, Counselor of the French Embassy, was in the company. Other guests, all from the Department of State, were Wallace Murray, Harry S. Hawkins, Paul N. Alling, J. Rives Childs, Harry B. Turkel, Henry J. Waldeigh, W. Quincy Stanton, Ernest J. Dempster, John C. Ross and Stanley Woodward.

Mrs. Garner, Senate Ladies At Luncheon

Mrs. O'Mahoney and Mrs. Schwartz Are Hostesses at Olney

Mrs. John Nance Garner, wife of the Vice President, was feted at a luncheon yesterday given at Olney Inn by Mrs. Joseph C. O'Mahoney and Mrs. H. H. Schwartz, wives of the Senators from Wyoming.

The invitations read "country luncheon" and adorning the table were three silhouettes of cowboys riding bucking broncos.

Mrs. Hugo Black and Mrs. Cordell Hull were among the guests at the luncheon. Others members of the Senate Ladies Luncheon Club attending were Mrs. Key Pittman, Mrs. Henry F. Ashurst, Mrs. Warren R. Austin, Mrs. Warren W. Barbour, Mrs. William E. Borah, Mrs. Prentiss M. Brown, Mrs. William J. Bulow, Mrs. Edward R. Burke, Mrs. James J. Davis, Mrs. Allen J. Ellender, Miss Doris Gibson, daughter of the Senator from Vermont; Miss Pauletta Guffey and Miss Ida Guffey, sisters of the Senator from Pennsylvania; Mrs. Walter F. George, Mrs. T. P. Gore, Mrs. Pat Harrison, Mrs. Carl A. Hatch, Mrs. James H. Hughes, Mrs. Edwin C. Johnson, Mrs. Hiram W. Johnson and Mrs. Josh Lee.

Still others attending the party were Mrs. Scott W. Lucas, Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, Mrs. Pat McCarran, Mrs. James M. Meade, Mrs. James E. Murray, Mrs. John H. Overton, Mrs. Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Mrs. Morris Sheppard, Mrs. Elmer Thomas, Mrs. Arthur H. Vandenberg, Mrs. Frederick Van Nuys, Mrs. Alexander Wiley, Mrs. Ralph Chase, the former Jane Holt, sister of Senator Rush Holt, and Mrs. John Bentsey.

A group of Wyoming persons who were guests were Mrs. Thurman Arnold, Mrs. Arthur Himbert, Mrs. Howard Snyder, Mrs. Clarence Riner and Mrs. John Jenkins.

Mr., Mrs. Cox On Honeymoon

Mr. and Mrs. Gideon Adolph Cox are en route to Maine following their wedding here on Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock in the Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral. From Maine the young couple plan to go to Michigan and Canada. Upon their return here they will live at 2929 Connecticut avenue.

The bride, the former Miss Helen Augusta Chase, is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Waite Chase. Mr. Cox is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Warren Murdock Cox, of Mobile, Ala.

The Very Rev. Noble C. Powell performed the ceremony before an altar banked with Easter lilies.

The bride wore a pale pink frock and a picture hat of the same shade. She carried a bouquet of Bride roses and lilies of the valley. The bridesmaids were Miss Helen M. Dyer and Miss Betsy Cox, sister of the bridegroom. Miss Dyer's frock was ashes of roses and her leghorn hat was trimmed in matching velvet. She carried Johanna Hill roses and delphiniums. Miss Cox wore an aqua blue gown with blue velvet banding her hat and carried a bouquet of Columbia roses and baby's breath.

The bridegroom's father was his best man. Following the ceremony a wedding breakfast was held at the Shoreham Hotel.

Finkenstaedts Take Fisher's Island Home

Mr. and Mrs. Edward Finkenstaedt have leased a house on Fisher's Island, off New London, Conn., for the month of August. They expect to be in Washington most of the time until then.

Other Washington residents summering on the island include the Undersecretary of the Treasury and Mrs. John Hanes, Mr. and Mrs. Cortland Parker, and Mr. and Mrs. Jasper DuBose.

Diplomat Entertains

Jacques Dumaine, First Secretary of the French Embassy, entertained friends informally at dinner last night at the Chevy Chase Club prior to the Thursday evening dance.

About The Town

Mr. and Mrs. Winslow to Hold Outdoor Party With Tennis, Swimming and Juleps

PARTIES BECOME more informal here in the summer, and they also take a health trend. Mr. and Mrs. Thacher Winslow have had the happy idea of celebrating their first wedding anniversary with an outdoor sports gathering tomorrow afternoon at Ranleigh, their place in McLean, Va. Guests have been asked to come any time from 3 o'clock on, and there will be tennis, swimming in the pool, and mint juleps.

Mr. and Mrs. Winslow will go to Newport for the wedding there July 15 of the latter's cousin, Aerielle Frazer, daughter of the Joseph W. Frazers, to the Hon. Michael Strutt, son of Baron Belper and the Countess of Rosebery. He is a brother of the former Lavinia Strutt, whose wedding two years ago to the Duke of Norfolk was one of the biggest events of the London season.

The Winslows will arrive in Newport the day before the wedding to attend the dinner which Mr. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor will give that night for the couple. Only members of the two families and close friends have been invited to the ceremony, and the bride-to-be will have no attendants. She was bridesmaid at her cousin's wedding here a year ago.

Before Newport, Mr. and Mrs. Winslow will spend two weeks visiting his parents on Cape Cod and her mother, Mrs. Randolph Leigh, at Jamestown, R. I.

LIKE ALL amateur productions, the presentation of Malcolm Ross' interesting play, "God Is Love," given Wednesday evening on the terrace of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Waldron Faulkner, was an hour late in beginning. But nobody minded, for it would be impossible to find a more perfect setting for such a performance or a more beautiful evening.

Mr. Faulkner, a well-known architect, designed himself his white stone house on the Avery Coonley property near Newark street. The residence is of white stone—modernized Greek with Chinese doorways, according to our informant, Rudolph Stanley Brown, another architect present. The flagged terrace, which was floodlighted, looks out over a large lawn, where the spectators gathered. An accordionist in gypsy costume wandered about playing before the show began, and punch was served. Mr. Ross said he hoped enough of the latter would induce the guests to sign up for subscriptions for next year to the Civic Theater, which put on his play.

"God Is Love" is a modern morality play, modeled after the old ones so popular in France during the Middle Ages, in which God and the Devil were represented as taking part in the dialogue. A 1939 "triangle" was portrayed on the terrace, with a married man trying to decide between his wife and another woman, and David Shaw, in the role of God, was on the roof of one of the wings above the terrace. The Devil, in evening clothes, with a red spear, stood on an adjacent wall.

AMONG THOSE present: Ruth Nichols, the well-known aviatrix, who in 1930 beat Lindbergh's speed record from Los Angeles to New York, and who crashed in Newfoundland later while trying to fly the Atlantic . . . Mrs. Herbert Feis, who leaves tomorrow to spend the summer in Santa Barbara, Calif. . . . her sister-in-law, Mrs. Stanley Brown, now already en route to Nantucket, where she has summered in the same house ever since she was 6 years old . . . Mrs. Walter White, another bound shortly for the little island, the next stop from which is Portugal . . . the Naval Attache of the Italian Embassy, Marquis Sant'Orsola . . . Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Eliot, down from Boston—he formerly was general counsel of the Social Security Board . . . Mr. and Mrs. Richard Sanger chatting with James Mann . . . Edwin Smith, of the National Labor Relations Board, with Mrs. Smith . . . and lots of others.

THE OTHER DAY members of the W. C. T. U. payed a visit to a hospital where a friend of ours has the misfortune to be, and went from room to room, leaving a bouquet with each patient except our friend. Glancing into her room, the ladies bountiful had backed out hastily when they spied a little bar with which our friend occasionally eases her hour of pain and entertains those who call on her.

TRICKLING BACK to Washington still come stories about the dinner at Hyde Park in honor of the King and Queen. In the midst of the meal, a tremendous crash was heard which sent the Secret Service scuttling to the doors and windows. It was discovered that a serving table, piled high with Roosevelt china, had crashed to the floor. Later, just after the gentlemen had joined the ladies, came another terrific noise, and again the detectives ran to the door. But it was only a butler, who, nervous because of the first accident, had let fall on the floor a tray of water glasses he was handing around. The Queen, it is reported, could not keep from bursting out laughing.

Miss Marian Marton Becomes Bride of Fletcher Veitch, Jr.

Candlelight Service Performed at Walter Reed Chapel; Couple to Live in Arlington After Tour of North

In a candlelight service last night at Walter Reed Chapel Miss Marian Marton became the bride of Fletcher P. Veitch, jr., at 8 o'clock. The bride is the daughter of Lieut. Col. Emmet C. Marton. Mr. Veitch is the son of Dr. and Mrs. Fletcher P. Veitch, of College Park, Md.

White gladioli, snapdragons, larkspur and baby's breath, intermingled with palms and ferns, banked the altar for the ceremony. The Rev. Patrick Ryan officiated.

The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a white lace gown with a high standing collar, long sleeves and bouffant skirt. Her full length veil was held in place by a coronet of pearls and she carried a prayer book with a shower of lilies of the valley and small gardenias.

Attending as matron of honor was Mrs. Emmet C. Marton, jr., sister-in-law of the bride. Her white net frock had a standing collar and short puffed sleeves, and she carried a sheaf of ferns tied with a white ribbon. Miss Patsy Marton, a cousin of the bride, served as flower girl, and wore a white net frock with short sleeves and a shirred neckline. Her miniature bouquet was of fern tied with white ribbon.

George Gilbert served as best man and ushers were Emmet C. Marton, jr., of Syracuse, N. Y.; Robert E. L. Hall, of Arlington, Va.; Edwin Stimpson, of Baltimore, Md.; and Samuel Syme, of Chevy Chase, Md.

Immediately following the ceremony there was a reception at the home of the bride's father on Springland Lane. When the bride left for the honeymoon she was wearing a two-piece suit of gold basket weave and red accessories. Her corsage was of brown orchids.

The bride was graduated from Radcliffe College in 1934. Mr. Veitch was graduated from Maryland University and took his Ph. D. there. He is at present on the faculty of Georgetown Medical School.

After a motor trip to Lake Champlain, Northern New England and the Gaspe Peninsula the young couple will make their home in Arlington, Va. Here from Monroe, N. Y. for the ceremony was the bride's grandmother, Mrs. L. B. Wright.

Marie A. Fox Becomes Bride Of D. C. Gibeau

Couple Will Live in Baltimore After Trip To Thousand Islands

Miss Marie Antoinette Fox, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry M. Fox, was married yesterday morning at 10 o'clock to Donald C. Gibeau at the Holy Trinity Church. The bridegroom's brother, the Rev. Henry Gibeau, officiated. Mr. Gibeau is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gibeau, of Syracuse, N. Y.

The bride, given in marriage by her father, wore a lovely gown of white organdy. Her tulle veil was fashioned simply about her head and she carried a bouquet of orchids and lilies of the valley.

Miss Mary Agnes Fox, the bride's sister, was maid of honor. Her frock was of delph blue net and she carried a bouquet of delphinium and pink roses. Gowned in pink net, Miss Frances Brown served as bridesmaid. She also carried a bouquet of pink roses mingled with delphinium. The flower girl, Miss Patricia McGarvey, a cousin of the bride, wore a crisp white organdy frock and carried an old-fashioned bouquet.

Robert Gibeau served as his brother's best man and ushers included Joseph S. May, of Baltimore; Joseph Fox, the bride's brother, and James Kraublatter, of Baltimore.

Dinner Honors Barbara Burke

Miss Barbara Burke, whose wedding to Lewis Lind will take place tomorrow in the Metropolitan Methodist Episcopal Church, was the guest in whose honor Miss Jean Beachley entertained last evening at a spinster dinner at Garden Towers.

Guests included the matron of honor, Mrs. Louie C. Bean, formerly Miss Beatrice Burke, sister of the bride; Miss Chiyo Thomas, Mrs. Jack James and Mrs. William Leighton, all of whom will be bridesmaids. Also Miss Marsha Hatch, Miss Cuyler Schwartz, Mrs. Carolyn Hughes Martin and Mrs. Ralph Chase.

At the same time Mr. Lind entertained at a bachelor dinner at the Congressional Country Club, where his guests included the fathers of the couple, the best man and ushers.

Among the guests were Herman Lind, of Ohio, father of the bridegroom; Senator Burke, father of the bride; William Lind, best man and brother of the bridegroom; Kenneth Finlayson, of Omaha, Nebr.; George Case, jr., Jack James, Louie C. Bean, Dr. Cuthbert Concannon and Ralph K. Chase.

Houghtelings Will See Wedding Of Miss Delano

Mr. and Mrs. J. Lawrence Houghteling will leave today for Barrytown, N. Y., where they will attend the wedding of Miss Margaret Delano, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Delano, to A. J. Drexel Paul, jr., of Philadelphia, on Saturday.

After a brief stop at the New York World's Fair Mr. and Mrs. Houghteling will return to their home on Wyoming avenue to "pack up" for their annual trek to Winnetka, Ill., where they have a summer place. They plan to leave on June 30.

Mrs. Houghteling entertained at a small tea in the garden of her home yesterday afternoon.

Mrs. Dent Gives Luncheon Party

Mrs. Edward Addison Dent entertained at luncheon yesterday in Mrs. K's Toll House Tavern in honor of Mrs. John Astor Deinner, of Evanston, Ill.

Guests were Mrs. David McCoach, jr., Mrs. William A. Van Duzer, Mrs. Herbert C. Whitehurst, Mrs. Elwood H. Seal, Mrs. Hugh P. Oram, Mrs. William A. Draper, Mrs. Milburn Colvin, Mrs. Lynn Colvin, Mrs. Daniel J. Cox and Mrs. David A. Pine.

Notes of Society

Official and Residential

Maj. Gen. and Mrs. George A. Lynch entertained informally at the Shoreham Terrace last evening for their daughter-in-law, Mrs. George E. Lynch, who is here en route from Fort Bragg, N. C., to New York, to attend the World's Fair. Col. and Mrs. William F. Lee, of Fort Washington, Md., were also among the guests last night.

Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward, member of the Social Security Board, gave a tea in her apartment at the Westchester yesterday afternoon for Mrs. Florence Kerr, assistant administrator of the Works Progress Administration.

Mrs. Ned Brunson Harris, who has been recuperating in Georgetown Hospital since February 27, when she fractured a leg, will return to her apartment at the Park Lane tomorrow.

Mrs. Francis Whitten, of Florida, is in Washington for a brief stay.

Mrs. Henry I. Coleman gave a party last night in honor of the sixteenth birthday of her daughter, Miss Lorene Coleman. About 60 guests attended the affair, which was held in the ballroom and on the terrace of Henderson Castle. The guest of honor wore a white net frock.

Mrs. William Stephen Turner, of Winston-Salem, N. C., who has been visiting her parents, Lieut. Col. and Mrs. William F. Pearson, gave a small, informal luncheon in the Louis Seize Room of the Shoreham yesterday for Mrs. Basil Pearson Cooper, the former Miss Dorothy Gould Fowler, who was married early in May.

Miss Carol Baer has returned from her studies at Wellesley College to spend the summer with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. David Baer.

Mrs. Rinehart Honors Bar Harbor House Guest

Mrs. Stanley M. Rinehart (Mary Roberts Rinehart), formerly of Washington, who spends her summers at Bar Harbor, entertained at a dinner there on Wednesday night in honor of Gordon Buchanan, her house guest.

Others present were Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Langhorne and Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Bell Sweeney, of Washington; Clarence Stetson, of Bangor, Me.; Mr. and Mrs. William McNain, Mrs. F. H. McCormick and Dr. Stanley J. G. Nowack.

Your Figure Madame!

By Ida Jean Kain

Office Workers Challenge Waistline Record of Hepburn

WHEN KATHARINE HEPBURN was described as having an incredibly small waistline of 24 inches, a number of streamlined office girls challenged the incredible part of it and sent in their measurements. Martha, who is five feet six inches tall, has a waistline measurement of 24 inches; Lucille, five feet seven inches, has a waistline 23½ inches; Delma, five feet five, has a 23-inch waist and so has Virginia, who is five feet two. And they wrote that they didn't use elastic tape measures, either!

Well, hurrah for the working girl! It's more difficult for the office girl to keep her figure than it is for the film player. Being a star is no easy job and most of them earn their big salaries. But even so, acting is not nearly as hard on the figure as routine office work. Constant sitting causes the waist to settle into the hips and the hips to spread.

Before we take up specific exercises for the office girls, however, let's see just how streamlined the waistlines should be. You will notice that the girl five feet seven has a 23½ inch waist and that the girl five feet two has a 23-inch waist. Now, the tall girl will have a larger bust than the small girl, so that the difference between the two measurements will be greater in the tall girl. That's the way it should be.

To determine whether or not your own figure is lovely, compare the measurements to each other and take your height into account. There should be a seven to 10 inch difference between the bust and waist measurements. The variation of seven to 10 inches depends on height. The tall girl will have a nicer figure with a proportionately smaller waist than the short girl.

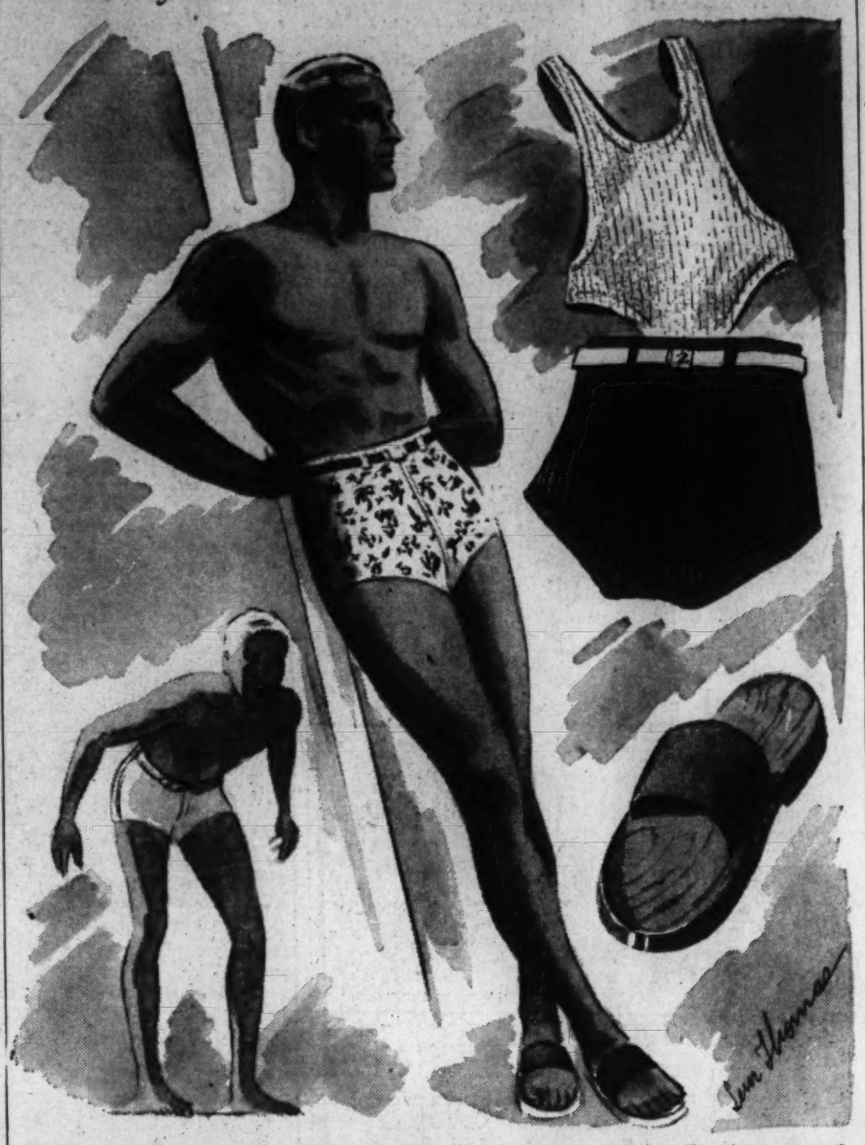
The waistline thickens when you grow stodgy and exercise is the only thing that will keep it trim. One of the most effective waistline exercises is the following:

POSITION: Sit on the floor with the legs straight and as wide apart as possible. Have the arms straight up overhead, and hold them close against the head.

MOVEMENT: Bending only at the waist, lean forward and try to touch the hands to the floor in front without changing their original position. Then, swing the trunk sideways and grasp the right foot with the right hand. Hold for a second, bend forward again, and swing over to the left.

If your weight is normal or nearly so, exercises of the type just described will give you a slender waist, one that is in beautiful proportion to the bust measurement.

Beach Wear for Men Is as Eccentric This Season As Milady's Hats—and as Attractive to Her



Here are beach fashions for all the masculine members of the family. For the teen-aged high school student are the brilliant yellow satin trunks (at left) which go with youthful sun tans. Centered, like a bronzed young god, is the college man displaying the elasticized Hawaiian trunks to excellent advantage. He wears the handsome Cuban wood sandals, popular for beach wear this summer. At right is the perfect suit for father. The ribbed upper which snaps on or off and attaches to the well-built knit trunks is concealing, yet flattering, to older, heavier figures

Unimaginative Two Piece Ensembles Aren't in the Swim

By Marshall Adams,
The Post Fashion Editor.

IT HAS BEEN said that men's playtime fashions rival women's hats in eccentricity. Perhaps that analogy holds for the newest crop of beach styles that has descended like a bombshell on Washington.

With National Swim Week just a few days off, we investigated, and lost ourselves in a fantastic, but highly entertaining collection of masculine swim suits.

The one we found most extraordinary and which induced jungle thoughts of Tarzan, was a brief swim trunk of leopard spots in tawny brown and gold. This is the suit that many a timid wife and sister has chuckled over, viewed from local haberdasher's windows. Yet, surprisingly enough, it is a suit that has found eager response from the men themselves.

In inquiring what type of man reacts to exotic swim fashions, we found more than one chesty youth admitting, nay beaming, that he was one of the jungle favoring group. Youths definitely like the tropic influence but it is mostly the invincible "Joe College" who favors the extreme in swim wear. Local stylists, of course, are happy over this, because until the last two years, beach fashions have been entirely feminine—the men sticking like glue to unimaginative navy trunks and white toppers.

An observant local beach wear stylist classified the types who look best in the new styles of suits. The most popular suit of the season, he says, is a dashing Hawaiian printed one of trunks taken from the picturesque beachcombers of the South Seas. This suit combines all the novel features of this season's beach year. It is brief, cut high, and it has no top. It is a Wickee fashion, which means that its fabric is elasticized satin, lustrous and form fitting.

The chief charm of this Hawaiian suit is its print. It is boldly patterned with swaying palms, natives and hibiscus plants, plus all the color of bright seas and skies.

A young man with a perfect figure looks superbly like a modern Adonis in such a suit of trunks. But older men should steer clear of spots and palms. They should choose one of the attractive, but more conservative, suits of knit wear. These are in the same general trend as last year's conventionally cut suits, but there are many clever improvements. For instance, the two-piece knit suit has two sturdy snaps to control the detachable shirt and trunks. The zipper is still in use for some suits, but snaps are easier to manage and are rust preventative. Also the new colors are far smarter and more becoming for the older or stouter man. Deep maroon is slimming, yet rich in color. Skipper blue is also a warm, flattering hue as a departure from black or dark brown.

If your son or brother is of high school age and doesn't restrict himself to two-piece suits, here is a tip. Callow youths and teen-agers love high, light pastels. One of their favorites is sunny yellow, especially in the Gob trunk, cut higher in the waist and done in shiny satin lastex. Yellow and white and pale green are becoming to their sun tans.

Ex-Friend

Yes, it's going to be nice to see Lucy again. Good old Lucy! It's really a shame that you don't see her oftener . . . after all old friends are best . . .

Say, that clock says 5 minutes to 2! And she said she'd come at 2! Oh, well, she'll surely be 10 minutes late. Everybody is. However, you must step along. She'll be in her car and you mustn't make her wait.

You hurry with your dressing, thinking warmly of Lucy. So nice of her to call you—say, you ARE late, but you're making time. And if she'll just hold off until a few minutes after 2—now, where on earth is your eyebrow brush? . . . Oh, and you havn't changed things into your white pocketbook; and—Heavens! There's the phone!

Tell her I'll be down in 2 minutes," you reply.

If that isn't just like Lucy, you think as you go into a whirling dervish act changing your pocketbook, tieing your shoes, hunting your gloves, sticking hairpins in your hair . . . Why, it's not even 2 yet! Not for 2 minutes! And to think she'd barge in on you like this—making you rush so . . . and virtually invite a heart attack. These people who always come ahead of time—or even on time—make you sick anyway! Well, Lucy always was one of those consciencious, stuffy be-there-on-the-dot bores. You should have remembered!

You slam on your hat and rush out putting on your wrist watch your beads and earrings on the way. One thing certain—this is your last date with Lucy.

Evolution

I used to long for time to think
And meditate upon it all,
But now I've found that such pursuit,
Upon my spirit casts a pall.

And so I think perhaps I'm blest
That trivia fills my waking hours,
And gives me sense of self-esteem

Plant Flowers In Window Box

HAVE YOU A PORCH, a bit of roof under the blue sky, a tiny paved yard, or only a window or two? Create a friendly nook of flowers and trailing vines—planted in boxes, jars and tubs.

What to choose? In boxes for sunny spots plant the quick-blooming saucy nasturtiums, bright marigolds, torenia with snapdragon-like blossoms of light blue with yellow throats, fluffy ageratum in blues and whites—and trailing ivy.

For shady spots begonias and ferns do best—in very sunny places—cacti, sansevieria, aloe.

Easy to make a success of your box gardens. Put an inch or so of cinders in the bottom of each box, then add garden soil as shown in diagram. You may start with seeds, seedlings or plants from the florist.

Water your box garden daily, twice daily in windy or dry weather. And for continuous bloom, pick flowers before they form seeds.

Bread Is Basis for Pilgrim Pie

By The Post Food Editor

MOST PERSONS think that the reference to bread as "the staff of life" comes from the Bible. Others attribute the first use of this term to Jonathan Swift, the English writer of the seventeenth century. Neither of these ideas is strictly correct, according to the American Institute of Baking of Rockefeller Center in New York. The first person to employ this phrase was Matthew Henry, a Biblical commentator who was born in England in 1662.

The Rev. Mr. Henry got his inspiration from the passage in the 104th Psalm, "bread which strengtheneth man's heart," but in his commentaries he changed it to read, "Here is bread, which strengthens a man's heart, and therefore called the staff of life." Dean Swift, who was a contemporary, later used this felicitous expression in his book, "Tale of a Tub."

Probably as far back as you can remember, bread has formed a part of every meal. Here is a recipe using bread which is a delight and a surprise.

Pilgrim Pies

Combine 2 cups cold minced lamb, 1 tablespoon minced parsley, 1 tablespoon Worcestershire sauce, ¼ teaspoon salt, and 1 cup lamb gravy, thickened. Spread portions on each of the slices of bread. Cover each lightly with a mound of mashed potatoes, dot with butter and sprinkle with paprika. Place on a baking sheet and brown quickly in a hot oven, 475 degrees about 10 minutes. Six portions.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Five Years' Romance Explodes in Quarrel; Man Turns to Another; Woman Asks Advice

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am a woman 28 years old and I have been going with a man of 36 for nearly five years. About three weeks ago we had a quarrel, and after ten days he came to me and wanted to make up, so we did. Things went along all right for a week, after which he began to make excuses when I telephoned him. He stopped calling me, so I asked him what was wrong. He said there was nothing wrong. Then he called a few times, but when I suggested going out some place he made excuses.

I asked him if there was someone else and at first he said "No." Then he said he had met and become interested in a girl, at the time we had our quarrel. I asked him if he loved her and he said he didn't know; that he wanted to find out. I am very much in love with him and yet I don't want him if he doesn't care for me. Yet I know he loved me once, because prior to this quarrel, he would do anything to make me happy.

After a few days, he said he would not see me for a week, and would see the other girl. He said if he found that he liked me better than her, he would let me know. But I refused to accept this arrangement because I feel that he doesn't love the girl so much as he likes the company she keeps. They drink and are wild and I am not that sort. Please tell me what to do. UNHAPPY.

The Value of Poise

DEAR UNHAPPY: The pattern of your relationship with this man is running absolutely true to the form of all unduly prolonged courtships (so-called) which profess no other basis than that of present companionship. Sooner or later such associations are fretted, if not entirely disrupted, by the cross-fire of a counter-attraction, engaging the attention of the man or the woman, as the case may be.

Seasoned counsellors in human relationships are virtually unanimous in predicting heartache, if not heartbreak, for one person or the other, in instances where a man and a woman single each other out from the crowd and settle down to a protracted social alliance that is not underwritten by the mutually avowed, sincerely entertained intention to be married as soon as circumstances will permit.

Even when the intention to be married exists and has been declared, the relationship that is, of necessity, indefinitely prolonged on a sweethearting basis, may be considered in constant jeopardy from vagrant outside influences after the first two years of association. In the majority of cases, each personality will have lost its first extravagantly glamorous novelty for the other by that time; while the inescapable obligation of each to pursue separate ways of life, as unmarried man and maid, will have prevented the two individuals from working shoulder-to-shoulder together in developing a granite understructure of indivisible interdependence to take the place of the ephemeral superstructure of romantic attractiveness.

However, to give specific consideration to your immediate problem: There is, in my mind, some question as to whether your long-time admirer is telling the whole truth when he says he met and became emotionally involved with the other girl during that period of estrangement following your quarrel. I am inclined to think that his interest in her antedated his quarrel with you, and was largely responsible for it.

Suddenly responsive to a fresh brand of feminine charm (to-wit: hers) he found himself as suddenly dissatisfied with your erstwhile winning ways, and thoroughly vexed, as well, at the prospect of having to continue dancing attendance upon you, whether or no. The quarrel may have been either deliberate or spontaneous; but it was, in essence, I think, an expression of the man's resentment at finding himself bound to one woman's side, by habit, when he would far rather be in another woman's company.

Habit, plus remorse, pl some deep-rooted affection, plus some curiosity, has pulled him back to you several times since that quarrel. And if you would stake your all on getting him back, either temporarily or—by a one to one-thousand shot—permanently, I suggest that you relinquish, immediately, such attitudes as bossiness, possessiveness and querulousness toward him. I think you should have accepted his proposal to remain away for a week, at the end of which time he was to render a report on the state of his conflicting emotions. I think you should have said, "By all means! DO remain away until you know your own mind." And when he did call, at the end of that week, I think you should have been "out," to him.

I think you should have contrived, quite diplomatically, to make it impossible for him to see you for a fortnight at least, and preferably longer. You might have been out of town, gone quite unexpectedly on a vacation, without letting him know, since by his own arrangement you were not to communicate with each other until he took the initiative. Or you might have run up a series of social engagements for your leisure hours, none of which could be conveniently broken. Or you might have been, simply, "out" to him; which is to say that someone else could have taken your messages, over the telephone and at the door, and reported you "not at home" when he called.

By the time he manages, eventually, to reach you for a heart-to-heart talk, you should have completely recovered your emotional poise, to all outward appearances, at least; and should meet his confessions, whatever they are, with an attitude of unreadable amiability. If he says he loves the other girl—very well, your manner may imply; it is just about what you had expected. If he says you are the only girl he loves, or ever will love—again, very well; but you have had such a jolt from this past experience that you think it best to revise the association henceforth and see somewhat less of him in future, and on a different basis: on a basis of friendship rather than upon a basis of witlessly clinging emotional dependence.

An attitude of detachment is your best bet in this situation. It really leaves the man free to learn where he stands, with himself; and, moreover, gives him food for thought concerning your latent capacity for springing surprises. Since he takes you so much for granted, and since some of his present aversion to your society is inspired by your clinging hysteria, you can only hope to put a different face on the situation by giving him a reaction he had not counted on. M. H.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Remember the epidemic of Glorias that struck America nearly 20 years ago? Maybe Gloria Swanson had a lot to do with this favorite name for little girls—at any rate, its popularity still continues. But now a new one has struck—beginning, perhaps, in the film studios.

This one can be traced directly to the unprecedented publicity poured over a local debutante, whose initials are B. D. D. F. Already Hollywood has renamed two youngsters. Betty Leabo, a model, has become Brenda Joyce for the films, and Ardis Gaines what's wrong with that pretty handle?) is now Brenda Marshall in the moon pitchers. Watch out for a mighty host of Brendas this coming year. Very attractive name, too, and goes well with almost any surname.

Most star sapphires owned by one woman, so far as I know, are the property of Mrs. Frank Morgan, wife of the elegant actor. Gosh, what I'd give for ONE . . . Best chuckle of the month—the sour and bitter faces and speeches of so-called "New York society leaders" at being left out of the hoopla for the King and Queen of England, while all governmental figures here got at least a long look and probably a handshake. Serves our town's pretentious snobs right, I say.

The first burn IS THE DANGEROUS ONE!

Use Helena Rubinstein's SUNPROOF CREAM 1.00

Whether you'll keep creamy fair, or acquire a beautiful new coat of tan is a matter of taste or type. Either way, you must protect your skin from the burning actinic rays of the sun with Helena Rubinstein's marvelous SUNPROOF CREAM, which also acts to keep your skin from becoming dry and coarse-looking after exposure to the sun. Use it lavishly and stay fair, lightly and have a smooth, golden tan. A creamy semi-liquid not at all sticky. Blends beautifully into the skin and makes a perfect powder base. 1.00.

To brown more quickly, use Helena Rubinstein's marvelous SUNBURN OIL. Encourages a deep bronze tan without burning. A favorite with men, too. 1.00

Peoples United In Aims, Brazil General Holds

Says His Countrymen Desire to Assist U. S. In Obtaining Peace

Gen. Pedro Aurelio de Goes Monteiro declared last night that the people and army of Brazil wish to assist the United States "in obtaining the peace which we all desire."

The Brazilian army chief, who leaves this morning for a three-week inspection trip of Army posts, called the United States "the most powerful country of the world . . . able to guarantee the ideals which are common to both Americas." His address, delivered on a nation-wide radio hook-up, were later rebroadcast to Brazil.

Emphasizing the "fraternal feeling" of the people and army of Brazil for the United States, Gen. Goes Monteiro said the peoples of the two nations "are united in developing the greatness of this continent."

Gen. Marshall Speaks

Brig. Gen. George C. Marshall, American chief of staff-designate, who has just completed a good-will tour of Brazil, spoke on the same program. He said that it was "a rare privilege and a high honor" to find in what "high esteem, in what high position, the people of that country hold the United States."

The Brazilian chief of staff was guest of honor at a White House luncheon yesterday and exchanged toasts with President Roosevelt to the friendship between the two nations. The toasts were said to be confined to expressions of good will and warm friendship and to have no political significance.

Stops at Tomb of Unknown

Earlier, Goes Monteiro and his party called on Secretary Woodring and Assistant Secretary Johnson, visited the Pan American Union, the Lincoln Memorial, Fort Myer and Arlington. Stopping in the cemetery, the General placed a wreath on the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

Ambassador Martins entertained for Goes Monteiro at dinner last night. Guests included Hull, Woodring, Welles, Edison, Assistant Secretary of State Berle, Gens. Craig and Marshall, Representatives May and Bloom, Laurence Duggan, of the State Department; Rear Admiral Walter Anderson, Col. E. R. Warner McCabe and Col. J. A. Crane.

Gen. Goes Monteiro and his aides leave here this morning on an Army plane for Langley Field, Va., where they will witness an Air Corps demonstration. In the afternoon they will inspect Fort Monroe, Va. Tomorrow they fly to Barksdale Field, La.

Its Own Glamour Girl Makes Bow To Harlem's '400'

New York, June 22 (AP).—Most of Harlem's Four Hundred slept late today after a lively coming-out party for their own No. 1 glamour girl.

There were at least that many formally clad guests in Renaissance ballroom last night when 18-year-old Wezylynn Margaret Develle Tildon made her social bow. It was the biggest affair of its kind in Harlem history.

Plunge Kills Warburton's Actress Wife

MRS. C. E. WARBURTON

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, June 22.—A woman identified by papers in a purse as the former showgirl wife of S. Edgerton Warburton, Philadelphia insurance broker and grandson of John Wanamaker, the merchant, was killed today in a 200-foot plunge from an East Pittsburgh bridge.

The woman, police reported, left her expensive automobile on the bridge, climbed over a railing, and dropped. Her body was found on railroad tracks below.

Mrs. Warburton, formerly of Detroit, was once a night club singer and musical comedy performer. She recently sued for divorce, charging cruelty. A note in her purse, found in the car, said she had been ill of a nervous ailment, adding:

"I am so disturbed that the threatened move of Eggie's is just about the last straw. My first impulse was to have it over if Eg really had stopped loving me or wanting me."

Warburton's father, Maj. Barclay H. Warburton, Philadelphia banker and broker, was Mayor of Palm Beach, Fla., in 1928.

Chief Deputy Coroner P. M. Burns reported a brother, Russell Hatch, of Pittsburgh, confirmed the identification at the morgue.

Warburton's first wife, the former Miss Elizabeth Peltz, who eloped with him to Elkton, Md., in 1923, divorced him in 1930.

Rep. Smith Asks Pay Act, Labor Board Inquiries

Cox Predicts Both Resolutions Will Be Approved by House

Representative Howard Smith (Democrat), of Virginia, yesterday introduced a brace of resolutions providing for a sweeping House investigation of the national labor relations act and the wage-hour law and their administration.

Representative Eugene E. Cox (Democrat), of Georgia, like Smith a high-ranking member of the Rules Committee, predicted that both resolutions would be sent to the House for a vote and "would be adopted."

The resolutions would provide for two special House committees of five members each, employed to investigate NLRB and the Wage-Hour Administration and report on:

Whether the board has been "fair and impartial" in its conduct, its decisions, its interpretation of the law, and its dealings between different labor organizations and between employer and employe.

What effect the Wagner act has had on increasing or decreasing labor disputes, employment and general economic conditions.

What amendments are desirable to bring about better relations between labor unions and between employer and employe," and what personnel changes are desirable.

Whether the NLRB has attempted to write into law "intents and purposes not justified by the language of the act."

Whether Congress should by legislation further define interstate commerce.

The introduction of the Smith resolutions immediately upon the heels of the announcement by the National Labor Relations Board of a limited revision of its own regulations made it plain that House opponents of the laws and their present administration are unwilling to Begard the board's concessions as a solution.

McCarran to Fight Attempts To Lay Aside Money Measure

By the United Press.

Senate passage of the $1,735,000,000 relief bill before June 30, end of the fiscal year, was imperilled yesterday when Senator McCarran (Democrat), of Nevada, a leader of the silver bloc fighting the Administration's monetary measure, announced he would block further attempts to lay aside the latter legislation.

In connection with Senate committee consideration of the relief bill, Mayor LaGuardia of New York appeared before the group to urge removal of restrictions placed on expenditures by the House, especially the provision that would limit Federal contributions on any project to $40,000. He indorsed a proposal for restoration of the Federal Theater project, stricken out by the House.

Mayors Tobin, of Boston, and Burton, of Cleveland, testified in support of LaGuardia's complaint against the restrictive features of the House bill.

Ralph Hetzel, jr., unemployment director of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, and George Edwards, welfare director of the C. I. O.'s United Automobile Workers Union, both testified against the House bill and urged liberalization of relief appropriations.

Senator Hatch (Democrat), New Mexico, called on House leaders, meanwhile, to dislodge from committee his Senate-approved bill making it a criminal offense to mix politics with relief. If no House action is forthcoming, he said, he will seek to attach it to the Senate version of the regular relief measure.

The Senate Appropriations subcommittee completed hearings on the relief bill yesterday and will begin voting on amendments today.

Senator Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, sub-committee chairman, said he was driving for a favorable report to the Senate, on the measure, by tonight.

Staid Jackson place, its austere building fronts presenting a citadel of dignity, saw picketing yesterday.

Mississippi Militia Raids 'Gold Coast'

Jackson, Miss., June 22 (U.P.).—National Guardsmen late today raided 31 saloons and gambling establishments on "Gold Coast," across Pearl River from the State capital, seized more than $100,000 worth of whisky and gaming equipment and arrested 60 persons, including five women.

One hundred and fifty militiamen, armed with bayoneted rifles and carrying search warrants signed by a justice of the peace, met no resistance. They cut into splinters many of the bars and most of the gambling tables and games.

The raids extended along a distance of more than 14 miles.

Cool, Frosty Beverages a First Aid to Summer Entertaining

Post Contest Brings Forth Unusual Recipes

Mrs. Weaver's Milk Flip Wins First Award

By Martha Ellyn,
The Post Food Editor

WHEN OLD SOL cuts up and the thermometer fairly bubbles and the humidity leaves you limp, it is time to do something about it. One of the best answers seems to be a cool, clinking drink. Post food readers leaped into the contest on summer beverages with such abandon that the food editor felt like the old woman who lived in a shoe—so many delightful suggestions and yet it would take pages and pages to tell about them.

Milk Flip

The smooth, cooling, tantalizing flavor of a caramel chocolate drink seems to fill the need for a beverage that's long, cool and nourishing and that is also news. Mrs. Andrew G. Weaver, 3914 Fifth street northwest, is the winner of the first prize of $3 with the following entry, and writes thus:

Mrs. Weaver

"Im submitting the following recipe in this week's contest, because I think it is a delicious summertime beverage, with an unusual flavor. Having a small boy of my own, milk drinks are always of interest to me, and I think other mothers may be glad to know of a nourishing beverage like this which is almost sure to appeal to children.

Caramel Chocolate Milk

Melt 3 squares of chocolate over hot water. Caramelize ¼ cup brown sugar by placing it in a heavy saucepan and heating slowly until melted and light brown. Add 1 cup boiling water and stir over heat until the sugar dissolves. Combine with the melted chocolate and cook for 2 or 3 minutes, stirring constantly. Then add 2 tablespoons brown sugar, 3 cups milk, ⅛ teaspoon salt and ½ teaspoon vanilla, and stir until thoroughly blended. Chill and serve in tall glasses, topped with whipped cream and a cherry or a strawberry. A portion of vanilla ice cream may be added to each serving. This amount serves 4.

Mid-Summer Quencher

Nelle Rowe, 5520 Fourth street northwest, suggests that you reinforce your summer drink program with a July Julep which has all the zip of a giant firecracker and still has the property of making one forget the mercury is sizzling. This frosted drink has so many good points with its blending of flavors that it carried off the second prize of $2.

Miss Rowe

July Julep

Pour 4 cups hot tea over 4 tablespoons mint jelly and 4 tablespoons sugar. Cool. Add 2 cups unsweetened pineapple and the juice of 4 lemons and rind of 2 cucumbers cut in long thin strips. Fill tall glasses half full; add shaved ice; fill up with ginger ale; top with a sprig of fresh mint. Serves 12.

Desert Iceberg

The luscious sweetness of the desert fruit is brought into the contest by the Fig Delight recipe. The fig is known to most people in the dried form and most generally eaten as a sweet, or used as an ingredient in puddings and cakes. To disprove the theory that there is nothing new under the sun, Mrs. Mary Doyle, 3425 R street northwest, gives us her fig flavored drink as proof. This unusual drink, which Mrs. Doyle styles Fig Delight, has been given an award of $1.

Mrs. Doyle

Fig Delight

Wash 1 pound figs and cover with 2 quarts boiling water. Let stand overnight. In the morning simmer until the figs are tender. Strain the juice (reserve figs for other uses). To the hot juice add 1 teaspoon grated lemon peel, 1 tablespoon grated orange peel, tiny piece of mace, ¾ cup sugar, ¼ cup honey and ¼ cup strained lemon juice. Let stand, covered, until cold. Strain and add ½ cup strained orange juice and 3 cups unsweetened pineapple juice. Chill thoroughly. Serve with 2 tablespoons of cracked ice and a slice of lemon in each glass.

Raspberry Kooler

Most of you will agree that it's almost impossible to improve on the flavor of raspberries—that queen of berries. But if you want to taste raspberries at their summit of perfection you will try the Fruit Juice Quencher recipe which won a prize of $1 for its author, Mrs. Mae Wells, Colonial Beach, Va. This beverage tinkling with ice will be just the drink for your porch party.

Mrs. Wells

Fruit Juice Quencher

Bring to a boil 1 quart of raspberry juice and ¾ cup of sugar. Add 1 pint of orange juice, ½ pint of lemon juice and chill thoroughly. Add 1 quart ginger ale and pour over cubes. Serve in chilled glasses with or without further garnish.

Citrus Julep

Cool as a woodland dell is the ice-chilled drink suggestion of one of our potential homemakers, Ruth Fullmer, 2219 Minnesota avenue southeast. Ruth is a high school student and on many occasions has demonstrated that she can put into practice the theory she learns in her home economics class. To Miss Fullmer goes a $1 award for her recipe for an Orange Julep.

Miss Fullmer

Orange Julep

Combine 1 quart orange juice, the juice of 6 limes, 1 cup powdered sugar, ½ cup chopped mint leaves. Chill for 1 hour. Strain. Pour over crushed ice in tall glasses, and fill with carbonated water. Stir gently. Garnish with mint sprigs and thin orange slices.

No wonder the trayful of gleaming drinks pictured above is a winning trick in this week's Post recipe contest, for there is cool enjoyment in every drop of this smooth and mellow Caramel Chocolate Drink. It is fragrant with flavorings and chuck full of nourishment and should be on the preferred list of summer coolers

Mail entries to Martha Ellyn, Post Food Editor.

Dip Your Cup Cakes In Currant Jelly

When faced with the unheralded advent of company, look in the cupboard for a jar of red currant jelly. Whip it to a froth with a fork. Into this delightful concoction, dip ordinary cup cakes and then roll in coconut.

A date sundae may be made from a can of date pudding. Heat the contents of tin in a double boiler. When thoroughly hot, pour it over vanilla ice cream, top with whipped cream and garnish with ground nuts. If there is any left-over pudding, try slicing it thin, frost in the refrigerator and serve as delicious cake.

To make a marvelous vegetable chowder in short time, combine a can of onion soup with a can of vegetable beef soup.

Don't Crowd Oven

For successful baking don't overcrowd your oven. Fill it to capacity, of course, but leave at least a 1-inch space between every pan and the edge of the oven. Inspect baking foods frequently and turn them about for even cooking.

'Panic' Spreads As U. S. Probes Louisiana WPA

Gov. Leche Denies Ambitions; Will Tend His Cattle Business

By International News Service.

Baton Rouge, La., June 22.—Charges of fraud in Louisiana's WPA, coupled with the sudden resignation of Gov. Richard W. Leche, brought an explosive situation in the State tonight highly reminiscent of the hectic days when the late Huey P. Long was Governor and then United States Senator.

There was no known connection between the unexpected resignation of Leche, one of the political heirs of the "Kingfish," and the threatened scandal in the Works Progress Administration, but their coincidence was said to have spread an apprehension bordering on panic in some quarters.

Leche, in his first statement on investigation of the reported WPA corruption, tonight offered to stand $10,000 of the expenses of any "responsible" investigating committee, the United Press reported.

He denied charges reputedly sworn to by seven WPA workers that they had worked for State officials. Leche said he had hired men at his Covington estate, but he had paid them and brought the materials they used.—Editor's note.]

Leche, telling reporters his resignation would take effect "within a week," said he was forced to give up his executive duties because of continued illness. He has suffered from severe attacks of arthritis and the newsmen talked to him in his sick room.

Denies Judgeship Ambition

He denied today he had any intention of accepting a Federal judgeship, saying he planned to "settle down and manage his cattle business and practice a little law."

State WPA Administrator J. H. Crutcher asked that a thorough investigation be made following charges made in Washington by Senator Gerald P. Nye (Republican), North Dakota, and Senator Rush Holt (Democrat), of West Virginia.

The charges in general were that there had been dishonesty and corruption in the administration of WPA funds at Louisiana State University; that WPA labor had been used freely in the construction of homes for State officials and the improvement of their estates, and that the State machine was "shaking down" WPA employes to keep the organization in power.

Secret Testimony Taken

WPA investigators today were seeking to find what basis there was for the charges. They were headed by Paul Hansen, chief of the WPA division of investigation, and were taking testimony secretly from WPA employes on State University projects.

Gov. Leche himself began an investigation at an "open hearing" June 10 after a New Orleans paper had printed a picture of a State University truck unloading window frames in front of the new home of a prominent politician.

This hearing was adjourned and whether it ever will be resumed was problematical.

Gov. Leche will be succeeded by Lieut. Gov. Earl K. Long, who at times was the bitter political foe of his brother Huey, whom one time he termed a "liar." They were on better terms, however, at the time of Huey's assassination in 1935.

That a bitter fight is in prospect for control of the State Democratic machine was indicated in the almost simultaneous announcements by Long and State Treasurer A. P. Tugwell that they will be candidates for Governor in 1940.

Murphy Denies Inquiry

Attorney General Murphy today denied the Justice Department is making any investigation of the Works Progress Administration in Louisiana in connection with the recent resignation of the State's Governor, Richard W. Leche.

"We have had to make surveys in certain areas all over the country but there is nothing special in Louisiana," Murphy declared.

At the same time, Senator Adams, of Colorado, denied that an article relating to charges of diversion of WPA materials and labor in Louisiana had been read into the record of his Senate Appropriations sub-committee, as had been reported.

Senator Ellender (Democrat), of Louisiana, said he would renew his proposal that Leche be appointed a Federal judge, though from Baton Rouge Leche was quoted as saying his only political purpose now "will be to further the political interests of President Roosevelt."

600 Lutheran Delegates Hear Senator Shipstead

Christianity is the only basis for a true democracy, Senator Henrik Shipstead, of Minnesota, said here last night, and through improvement of social and economic conditions, America can prove to the world that democracy can really work.

He spoke at the Mayflower before more than 600 youthful delegates to the fifth international convention of the Luther League of the American Lutheran Church, dining after a sight-seeing tour of Washington, during which they were greeted on the Capitol steps by Representa ve Henry O. Talle, of Iowa, and stood solemnly by as John D. Stagenman, another Iowan and league president, laid a wreath on the Unknown Soldiers Tomb in Arlington.

Earlier in the day, in the headquarters at Ritchie Coliseum, Maryland University, the convention renominated Stegenman for the executive position; the Rev. C. A. Wiederanders, of Toledo, Ohio; the Rev. Cecil B. Propst, Baltimore, chairman of the convention committee, and the Rev. George Busdieker, California, were first vice presidential nominees, and Charles Klinksick, Toledo, and Clayton Fisher, Detroit, second vice president. Miss Ruth Doermann, Blue Island, Ill., and Helen Haisan, of Green Bay, Wis., were nominated for secretary. Elections are slated for today.

Sharing the banquet program with Senator Shipstead was Dr. Gould Wickey, of Washington, executive secretary of the board of education, of the United Lutheran Church and one of America's foremost Lutheran educators, who challenged the youthful audience to "be witnesses for your faith."

"Communists are gathering in university centers, courageously declaring their faith and continually seeking to propagate that faith," he warned, adding that "Christian youth must be cells of Christian witnessing."

"I challenge you to be witnesses against a world which is trying to destroy all moral and spiritual values, and to witness for the Lordship of Jesus Christ in human life," continued Dr. Wickey, "and to work incessantly to make known and to apply those truths and principles which will make you free from those revolutionary forces which destroy a Christian culture and civilization."

Speaking at the Coliseum in the morning, Dr. Ralph H. Long, executive director of the National Lutheran Council, advised that "true witnessing for Christ is to begin within the home in which the Christian lives." There the most effective missionary work can be accomplished, for usually there is some one in every relationship who needs still to be saved.

Marvin Hartung, of Grace Lutheran Church, Washington, introduced the toastmaster, the Rev. H. N. Brobst, of Columbus, and Dr. Gerhard E. Lenski, Grace pastor, gave the invocation. Charter Heslep was song leader, and Rudolph Hellbach's string ensemble played.

A choral union concert, directed by Prof. Ellis E. Snyder, Capital University, Columbus, Ohio, will be the highspot of tonight's program. It will begin at 8 o'clock in the Coliseum.

Miner Teachers College Gives 101 Diplomas

Largest Graduating Class Hears Ballou; Dr. Logan Also Talks

On behalf of the Board of Education, Dr. Garnet C. Wilkinson, assistant superintendent of schools, presented 101 candidates for the degree of bachelor of science yesterday at the seventh annual commencement exercises of the Miner Teachers College, held in the auditorium of the Armstrong High School. The degrees were conferred, and diplomas presented, by John H. Wilson, member of the board.

Greetings to the graduates were extended by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, who called attention to the size of the graduating class which, for the first time, passed the mark of 100, a number exceeding the total for which the college building was originally designed.

Dr. Rayford Logan, of Howard University, in the address to the graduates, used the Gaines case as a point of departure. He condemned all doctrines of racial inequality, expressing the hope that the South might, in time, take the lead in application of doctrines of equality and liberty.

Eugene Clark Presides

He advocated a flexible educational program in which he also advocated development of separate schools for graduate training.

Eugene A. Clark, president of the Miner Teachers College, presided. The college orchestra, organized during the year by Arthur Smith, included in its program the prelude, "Sylvia" (Oley Speaks) and airs from Handel. Under direction of Miss Marie James, the college glee club sang "Come to Me" (Beethoven-Treharne) and Noble Cain's "Old Ark's a Moverin'." The invocation was said by the Rev. Daniel C. Pope, pastor of the Galbraith Church.

Lang Given 18 to 42 Months; Swindled 400

B. Edwin Lang, well-groomed 52-year-old promoter, yesterday was sentenced to 18 to 42 months in prison for stock frauds which cost 400 persons in this area an estimated $700,000.

Lang, who was indicted here as Frank J. Hill and who used other aliases, swayed as Justice Adkins pronounced sentence in District Court. He collapsed after pleading guilty a week ago and has been treated in the jail infirmary.

Lang operated the firm of Crumpton & Co. here and conducted an extensive stock selling scheme, using prize contests and other means of publicity. Statements were made to the effect that the company was associated with Chase National Bank and had the support of the bank.

The customers were persuaded to exchange common stock in utility companies for preferred stock. Although Lang's company got $150,000 worth of stock in this manner it never delivered the preferred stock.

Edward R. Haigler, investigator for the Securities and Exchange Commission, estimated the loss to the investors, through the increase in the value of their stock, came to $700,000.

Assistant District Attorney Heflin presented the evidence to the District grand jury and consented to Lang's plea of guilty.

Walt Mason, Rippling Rhyme Humorist Published by 200 Papers, Dies in California

Poet, 77, Was Long Ill; Was Taught by William Allen White

Verse Printed Like Prose; He Began His Career on Farm

By the Associated Press.

San Diego, Calif., June 22.—Walt Mason, 77, humorist and poet, died early today in his home at La Jolla after an illness of several weeks.

Mr. Mason became ill a few days before his birthday, May 4. He was a native of Columbus, Ontario, and come to the United States in 1880. That same year he was launched on his newspaper career when he got a job on a job press in St. Louis.

The poet's newspaper experience included jobs on the Atchison (Kans.) Globe, Lincoln (Nebr.) State Journal, and Emporia (Kans.) Gazette.

Published by 200 Papers

Mr. Mason leaves a daughter, Mary. His wife died in 1936.

Walt Mason was one poet who was both born and made. He was the fifth of six sons of a Welsh father and a Scotch mother, a combination which gave him stability spiced by a nimble wit.

The future "poet laureate of common sense," as he became known, was 4 years old when his father, a dyer in a woolen mill, was accidentally killed, and was 15 when his mother died.

Thrown on his own resources, Walt became a manual laborer. When he was 13 a narrow escape from drowning left him with defective hearing. The mishap had a great influence on Mason's future for, with some of the world shut off from him his powers of observation became keener and he turned within himself for much of the music his partial deafness kept from him in the world without. This he reproduced in his "rippling rhymes," the prose poetry which made him known virtually wherever newspapers are read.

Worked as Farm Hand

"It is probably due to this," he once said in reference to his deafness, "that I never became a merchant prince."

In failing to become a merchant prince the prose-poet achieved in his later life a position that put him on equal terms with them. A series of experiences was in store for him that brought him into touch with life in all its phases.

He left his boyhood home in 1880 and went to New York State and took a job as a farm hand. He referred to it as "the poorest fun he ever had." It was so poor, in fact, that he soon tired of it and took Horace Greeley's advice. St. Louis was West in those days and it was there that he took his first newspaper job. He went to work on a weekly humorous publication known as The Hornet.

Associated Press WIREPHOTO.
WALT MASON,

Studied Under White

From The Hornet he went into newspaper work in earnest. He held positions on several Middle Western newspapers and finally went to Emporia, Kans., where he got a job on William Allen White's Gazette. It was there, under the friendly tutelage of Mr. White, that he began to give the world his prose poems and became known as "Uncle Walt."

Mr. White told Mr. Mason he was wasting his time by not selling his rhymes. He thought so well of them that he sent some of them to George Matthew Adams, head of a syndicate, accompanied by a letter. Mr. Adams saw the beauty and appeal in them and tried them out. They went well and Mr. Adams and Mr. Mason soon became close personal friends as a result.

Three of Mr. Mason's poems have achieved world-wide notice. They are "The Little Green Tents," "The Journey" and "The Eyes of Lincoln."

Another great influence in Mr. Mason's life was his wife. In 1893 he married Ella Foss at Wooster, Ohio.

*X WASHINGTON: FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1939 21

Kelley Tight in Pinches, Nats Win, 8 to 5

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

A sprightly young fellow went clump-clumping in his spikes down the steps leading to the Washington dugout yesterday, and Oscar Melillo gazed raptly at the disappearing figure. "There," said Melillo, "goes the fastest guy I have ever seen in a baseball suit."

POVICH

He was talking, of course, about George Case, trim speedster of the Nats, and it was no mean compliment considering that Melillo has been in baseball since 1920, in the big leagues since 1925 "You can have the rest," Melillo added, "I'll take Case. I've seen Chapman, Rothrock, Cramer, Moses, Finney and all the others when they could pick 'em up and put 'em down at their best, and this kid can beat 'em to any base.

"Why, if he were a left-handed hitter, with those extra two steps toward first and able to take advantage of a left-hander's swing, he could beat out anything he laid down. No wonder he's leading the league in stolen bases. He figures."

And Case is literally sliding to fame on the seat of his pants. When he anteloped down to second base yesterday in the fifth inning while Joe Dobson was vainly trying to pick him off first, it was his twenty-seventh stolen base of the season. It was not his best stolen base, but it was a significant one. Because when Case stole his twenty-seventh base of the year, he had stolen as many bases as Frankie Crosetti stole throughout 1938 when he led the league in that specialty.

Still Doesn't Utilize Speed

The paradox is that Case is the standout base stealer of the league despite the fact that he is not yet acknowledged to be a good base runner. "He doesn't utilize his speed to the fullest," Bucky Harris will tell you. "He doesn't get the break on the pitcher that he should, but he's learning. He doesn't get as good a break as Ben Chapman does, but that takes a study of pitchers and he'll improve."

If there is any suspicion, however, that Case's value to the Washington club begins and ends with his base-stealing, that can be quickly dissipated. Because the name of the player who leads the league in the total number of hits this season is George Case. When he singled to left yesterday, it was his eighty-first hit of the young season. No other player can point to that many safe blows.

It's not strange that Case should be high among the leading hit-getters of the league. He beats out more infield rollers than any other player because of his sheer speed. And he happens also to be a clever bunter. He's the problem child of the league's third basemen, who must shade him close in anticipation of his bunts and thus leave themselves open to a single he may ram past them, which he does.

A Real Maker of Errors

And it's significant, too, that even when he isn't making his hits or drawing a base on balls, he's getting on base for the Nats. A check-up will probably reveal that the young man from Trenton provokes more errors than any other player in the league. Anything less than rapid handling of any ball he hits is futile and in their anxiety to grab the ball and get it away, infielders are pressing with disastrous results.

He's conquered the usual yen of the rookie to offer at bad balls, too, and when his talents are added up, the young man comes pretty close to being the most valuable chattel acquired by a big league club since the Yankees came up with Joe DiMaggio. That probably is no solace for Connie Mack, who once turned the lad away from Shibe Park with the admonition that "I don't think you'll ever be a pitcher."

Mack was right about that. Case was a horrible sort of pitcher, but Mack never did investigate his possibilities as an outfielder. Joe Cambria was the first to discover his talents in that direction, when he roped him in off the Trenton sandlots and gave him a job with the Nats' Trenton farm in the Eastern League. A year later, Cambria arranged for the Nats to play an exhibition game at Trenton for the express purpose of scouting young Case.

On the Spot—and Delivers

The lad knew he was on the spot that day, but apparently he was unaffected. He walloped a single double and triple, stole two bases, and generally disported himself like a swell prospect and later that year the Nats called him in from Trenton. That, for the Nats, was a happy day.

They gave him the regular centerfield job last season, and he never lost his grip on it, batting a healthy .305. This second year was to be the test of his hitting ability, and he is doing very nicely with his .318 average. He's getting to be quite a figure around the league.

"Which one is Case?" hotel clerks whisper as the Nats move into a new town on the road. They want a close look at the fellow who is making no less of a run-away of the base-stealing race than the Yanks are of the pennant race.

Bloodworth's Two Doubles Lead Attack

Ken Keltner Stars For Indians With 5 Straight Hits; Kelley Goes Route

By Shirley Povich.

The Nats weathered a rough first inning, rode out a storm of 14 Cleveland hits capped by two home runs, recovered from four errors of their own making, and beat the Indians yesterday. The final figures of the struggle were 8 to 5.

They beat the Indians by unloading five two-baggers against five Cleveland pitchers at the most inviting opportunities, and then throwing up a brilliant defense behind Harry Kelley's pitching in the late innings. Kelley, who brought the Nats' two-game losing streak to a halt, surrendered 14 hits to the Indians, but allowed only two runs after the first inning.

If it's any solace to the Indians, they outhit the Nats, 14 to 11, but they received the minimum benefit of the home run blasts of Hal Trosky and Ken Keltner. Each of the Cleveland sluggers hammered out his sixth home run of the season, but when they did the bases were as empty as a denuded vacuum. Keltner was in the thinning hair of "Old Folks" Kelley all afternoon with his five straight hits.

Jimmy Bloodworth was the important man for the Nats. He inserted a pair of productive two-baggers into the attack, driving home two runs and scoring a third. The Indians were suffering from double trouble in the Nats' big second inning when three consecutive doubles by Bloodworth, Bob Prichard and Angelo Giuliani touched off a four-run uprising and knocked Left-Handed Al Milnar out of the box.

Bill Zuber followed Milnar to the mound and was knocked loose from two runs by Bloodworth in the fourth, and Joe Dobson surrendered a run in the fifth. The Nats were both hitless and runless in the last three innings against Paul Sullivan and Harry Eisenstat, but Kelley saw them through.

There were no indications in the first inning that the Nats would check their losing streak, with Charley Gelbert and Bobby Estalella tossing a pair of damaging errors into the proceedings. And Kelley was off to a jittery start on his own

A 'Make-up Man' of Racing Posed With Trouble

The make-up man of a newspaper gets scant glory, but his is the all-important job of seeing that type is in the right place and editions roll on time. Comparable to him is the race track starter. If he does his job well, he is ignored; if he fails, he is booed long and loud. Right is John Morrissey, son of the late famous starter of the same name, who is handling the gate at Charles Town. He is in the act of pressing the button to let them go in the fourth race Wednesday. Sun Belle, on the rail, won, while Chief Jean (No. 6) is rearing up at the bell and was almost left. Morrissey is 32, married, has two children and a hobby—photography

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, June 22.—While the world of sport was experiencing its deep shock over the first announcement of Lou Gehrig's infantile paralysis, Monte Stratton, the one-legged pitcher for the Chicago White Sox, was telling us that he had given up his hopes of pitching—this season.

CONSIDINE

"I'll have to wait until next year," the tall and pleasant young man said, with a quiet determination that was somehow intolerably poignant. He hasn't quite accustomed himself to the fearful locomotion of a wooden foot and shin. There is a rather deep dip in his walk, as if what was left of his right leg hadn't yet agreed to unite with its artificial ally. He can pitch now, but it must be in batting practice, where there is no necessity to run.

"Next year I'll be able to run, and field my position," he promised, with the soft spoken zeal of a man who has found and set out upon one great goal in life. "I think I'll be a better pitcher than I ever was, too. I've got a better curve ball today than I had before . . . before it happened. I've developed it. Y'see, I've had to favor my leg. I've had to change the way I threw the ball, so it wouldn't hurt it. So unconsciously I've developed a new delivery; I'm throwing the ball overhand a lot more than I used to do. It's helped my curve ball a lot. Honest . . . All I need now is to be able to run a little more. And that'll come. I know it will."

Let 'Em Bunt, Says Monte

We asked him what he was going to do "next year" when he found himself in a tight ball game and the other side had to bunt to put a runner in scoring position.

"I'll do what any other pitcher does," he said. "I'll field the bunt. Hell, I don't want any favors. If I did, I wouldn't want to come back. I won't care if they bunt every ball on me. After all, they'll have a right to do anything they want to do up at the plate. Won't I be trying to strike out every guy up there?"

Stratton got between 16,000 and 17,000 letters and telegrams of condolence within a week or two after he accidentally blew away the lower portion of his leg. He still gets them, many of the letters and packages inclosing rabbits' feet, four leaf clovers, shamrocks and lucky pieces ranging from coins to the pulverized teeth of assorted fish and animals. He is 13,000 letters behind in his campaign to answer each note, but he has saved all the letters and hopes to work his way through them in a couple of years.

Stratton made nearly $25,000 out of an exhibition game between the Sox and Cubs. Even the concessionaires turned over their profits to him. Several fans who muscled their way into the park later sent him checks for the amount they should have paid for the tickets. He has also been promised a life-time job in the White Sox front office. We asked him why he didn't just call it a day and slide in behind a desk. It seem to hurt him a little.

"The only reason you say that," he protested, "is because you don't know what it means to be stopped in a game just when you're about to go to town."

Sox Set Favorable Example

The generosity of the Chicago club toward Stratton, who has given only a drop of the bucketful of talent that Gehrig gave to the Yankees, sets a high example for the Yankee management to follow. It has been said that Gehrig will be kept on the payroll the remainder of the year, probably voted a full share in the world series, and then given his unconditional release. This hardly seems possible. No institution that professes to be in the sporting business can safely do that to a player like Gehrig—though, of course, it has been done countless times to less fortunate players. If there is no place in the vast Yankee empire for Lou Gehrig then there is no place in it for loyal, persevering and talented baseball men.

Baseball needs sentimental relief. With its phoney contracts, its soulless cover-up deals, its profits, deficits and its hypocritical sanctimoniousness, it has become too vast and too bloodless and too business-like. It needs a little of the fundamental human touch that marked it in its foundling days and made it the game of America. And what better touch could you think of than one great Lou Gehrig day, at the 80,000 seat Yankee Stadium, with a 25-cent price for the kids who loved him?

Yankees Plan 'Lou Gehrig Day' For Ailing Player

New York, June 22.—Lou Gehrig is finding his friends are still with him.

Turning up at Yankee Stadium as usual this afternoon, after receiving his first treatment for a disease diagnosed as a form of chronic infantile paralysis, Gehrig was given a bundle of telegrams and letters expressing the sympathy of fans and was informed the club would hold a "Lou Gehrig Day" soon.

Plans for a game honoring Gehrig are now being worked out. President Ed Barrow of the Yankees said Manager Joe McCarthy and members of the team had expressed a desire to assist in every way possible.

Gehrig was given an injection of serum at the base of his spine this morning by Dr. Edward R. Maloney, one of the physicians designated by the Mayo clinic to administer treatment, and will receive a second injection in Philadelphia next week when the champions are there to play the Athletics.

Nats Battle Tigers In Ladies' Day Game

The Detroit Tigers invade Griffith Stadium today for the start of a three-game series with the Nats. It will be a ladies' day game, according to an announcement by Washington Club officials.

Three straight defeats were handed the Nats by the Tigers on their last visit to Detroit, and Bucky Harris will be attempting to settle that old score. Today he will send either Dutch Leonard or Alex Alexandra to the mound for the series opener.

Louis Ready For Galento's 'Single Punch'

By the Associated Press.

Pompton Lakes, N. J., June 22.—Tony Galento isn't the only one who realizes Tony Galento's chances against Joe Louis Wednesday night lie in the ability of the pudgy puncher to rush in and land the first punch of the 15-round fight.

Joe Louis does too.

So the brown bombing champion is perfecting a little plan of his own to stop the Jersey barkeep in his first charge—stop him like a brick wall would, in fact. Simply, it's this, as explained by Joe, himself, today.

"I'll jest ketch him comin' in."

Joe has heard that Tony's battle plans have been drawn around that initial attack. As a result, the champion will be ready with two "cute" tricks when they square off in Yankee Stadium.

They're a pair of aces, these tricks. They consist of his short range artillery, a left hook, but, more particularly, a short right uppercut.

He's been using them against his sparmates these last few days, and, although he still hasn't perfected his defense against left hooks, his short right, either to the chin or under the heart, does plenty of damage.

Joe went through his last full-time workout today, boxing six rounds. From now until Monday, except for a day off tomorrow, he'll spar only four rounds in each drill.

The New York State boxing commission, through its chairman, Gen. John J. Phelan, and its physician, Dr. William Walker, put the official "okay" on the dark dynamiter just before the workout.

Nova Ranked No. 3 Challenger by N.B.A.

By Al Hailey

Lou Nova's sudden rise to heavyweight fame, via a defeat of Max Baer, yesterday took a slap in the face from the National Boxing Association, as that body released its quarterly ratings of boxers in the eight professional fight weight divisions.

In a split decision the N. B. A. awards the No. 1 heavyweight championship contender's position to none other than Two Ton Tony, the Orange (N. J.) tavern keeper, but Nova, who hopes to meet the winner of the Louis-Galento fight in September, is pushed down to the No. 3 position.

Sandwiched firmly in between in the No. 2 challengers' position is Bob Pastor, New York heavyweight, who holds the distinction of staying ten rounds with Champion Joe Louis.

"The N. B. A. feels that Nova has not accomplished enough to deserve a spot ahead of Pastor, a fighter who has taken on all comers and pinned their ears back most of the time," said Col. Harvey L. Miller, chairman of the N. B. A. ratings committee and secretary of the District Boxing Commission.

"When we placed Nova sixth on the last quarterly ratings, the New York sports writers and boxing experts jumped down our throats because no one had heard of Nova," Miller said.

"All Nova has to his credit now are defeats of Gunnar Barlund, Tommy Farr and Max Baer. How he can expect to climb into No. 2 over Pastor with a record like that is more than I can see."

Minority voters on the ratings committee who placed Nova over Pastor were Joseph Triner, of Illi-

Bill Klem, Noted Umpire, Stricken In Cincinnati

By International News Service.

Cincinnati, June 22.—The recurrence of an abdominal condition may shortly write finis to the colorful career of Bill Klem, baseball's famous old umpire, it was learned today.

KLEM

The venerable National League dean of umpires was suddenly stricken here this morning following the Dodgers - Reds night game and was confined to his hotel room suffering what was described as "excruciating pain."

Arrangements were being made for Klem's removal to St. Louis where, it is feared, Dr. Robert F. Hyland, noted baseball surgeon, will be called upon to operate.

A condition suffered 10 years ago has returned to the 65-year-old Klem, according to Doc Wilson, trainer of the Dodgers.

Clark Kayoed By Lesnevich In 1st Round

By the Associated Press.

Nutley, N. J., June 22.—Gus Lesnevich, of Cliffside Park, turned in the most sensational upset in recent history of light-heavyweight boxing tonight, when he scored a technical knockout over Dave Clark, Detroit Negro stablemate of Joe Louis, in 1:28 of the first round of their scheduled ten-round bout at Nutley Velodrome.

Less than a minute after the fight began Lesnevich shot a left hook to the jaw and dropped Clark for an eight count. The left hook dropped Clark again and a barrage of both fists sent the Negro to the canvas for the third time, each for counts of eight.

When Clark went down for the fourth time, Referee Gene Roman halted the bout. It was the first time in 35 professional fights that Clark was knocked out. It was Lesnevich's sixty-first victory and twenty-third knockout in 65 engagements.

Jim Braddock And Lew Tendler Pick Galento

By the Associated Press.

Summit, N. J., June 22.—Two former greats of the ring—James J. Braddock and Lew Tendler, the Philadelphia lightweight—climbed aboard the Galento bandwagon today by flatly predicting "Two-Ton" Tony will defeat Joe Louis in their heavyweight title fight in New York next Wednesday night.

"I think Tony has a fine chance," said Braddock. "I wouldn't be a bit surprised if Galento licked him and we had another heavyweight champion from New Jersey. Galento is punching hard and punching sharp. He is really vicious and there is one great thing in his favor, it is just another fight for him. He's not a bit nervous or afraid of Louis now, nor he won't be going into the ring. In my opinion he stands a great chance to win. I have been up to Louis' camp and Louis looks bad."

East Potomac Pro Leads With 139

Spencer Fires 143; Coffey Defeats Gibson in 9-Hole Playoff With 37

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Mel Shorey, East Potomac's short-game artist, led two Washingtonians and a Virginia pro into qualifying places for the P. G. A. tournament yesterday at Indian Spring with two of the hottest rounds ever recorded in sectional trials in this vicinity—a score that may top the Nation's qualifiers.

The bushy-haired public links mentor fired ten birdies over the 36-hole route, took a big bogey 6, 2 over par, on the last hole of the morning round for a 68, when he had a 4 for a 66, and in the afternoon again came to the final hole needing a 4 for a sub-par effort, but finished with 5 for a regulation 71. His two-round total was 139.

Cliff Spencer, Beaver Dam's course record breaker failed at his specialty but succeeded in pairing two consistent rounds of 71 and 72 for a 143 total, 4 shots back of Shorey but well within the limit.

Coffey Wins Playoff

The third berth went to Winchester's young professional, Rut Coffey, who gained a place in his first National Tournament after a 9-hole playoff with Andy Gibson, the Maryland Open titleholder from Bonnie View, in Baltimore. They tied with 145, and Coffey won the playoff with 37 to 38.

Four more in the small but select field of 22 missed the playoff by a single stroke. Ralph Beach, sectional. P. G. A. president from Suburban, played the last four holes in three under par to finish with 146, Robert Barnett, Chevy Chase, was 40 on the back nine when a 39 would have put him in, for 146, George Diffenbaugh, Kenwood, played four holes bad, and Leo Walper, one of the favorites, couldn't overcome his morning 76, although finishing with a 70.

Shorey's feats of playing 36 holes without a 3-putt green, and scrambling to only two of his many pars, were a tribute to his two fine rounds. His birdie barrage started and ended with chip shots in the cup, on the second hole of the morning rounds, and thirty-fifth of the afternoon. He birdied the sixteenth and seventeenth holes each trip, and his longest putt of the day was a 20-footer, on the third, for a birdie.

The eighteenth hole was a jinx, but after his 6 in the first round he admitted he played safe for a bogey

Yale-Harvard Crew Race Today Strictly Even

By the Associated Press.

New London, Conn., June 22.—California won the inter-collegiate 4-mile rowing championship on the Hudson last Saturday, but tomorrow Yale races Harvard on the Thames, and as far as they are concerned, that is all that matters.

This seventy-seventh renewal of the country's oldest intercollegiate sports rivalry also is the be-all and the end-all in oarsmanship to the thousands of undergraduates and alumni who will follow the race from the observation train and the glittering spectator fleet that, late this afternoon, already was finding anchorages along the winding 4-mile course.

On the eve of the varsity contest, scheduled for 6:15 p. m. (Eastern standard time), it shapes up as strictly an even proposition. What will be, until race time, intangible factors are those most likely to decide the issue.

Harvard's combination crew, made up of varsity and freshman substitutes, this evening defeated the Eli subs by two lengths over a two-mile downstream course.

Marion Brown Meets Mrs. Walper for City Golf Title Today

Mrs. Peabody, Davy Beaten In Semifinals

Title Round Starts At 9:30 A.M. Over Columbia Course; Matches Not Close

Marion Brown's domination of the District women's championship meets the acid test today in Mrs. Leo Walper as youth and comparative veteran meet for the twelfth annual city title at Columbia at 9:15 a. m.

Miss Brown met the sensation of the first two rounds yesterday, Mrs. Myron Davy, of Congressional, was two down at the end of six holes, then shook off the bad start and won, 5 and 3.

Mrs. Walper was also off to a bad start, losing the first hole to Mrs. Hume Peabody, of Army and Navy, but won the next two, held the one-hole margin at the turn and added to the lead on the incoming stretch for a 3 and 2 triumph.

Today's appearance in the finals of a major tournament in this section is Mrs. Walper's second in as many months. She lost to Mrs. Jerome Sloman, of Suburban, in the Maryland State finals at Congressional.

Miss Brown, also holder of the Middle Atlantic crown, will be after her second consecutive District title as the Manor miss won last year at Indian Spring in the memorable match with Helen Dettweiler, who as Women's Western Open champion, will have a hand in the after-match ceremonies today.

Last-Inning Error Costs No-Hit Game

A lone error in the final inning last night robbed James McBain, Golub's Market pitcher, of a no-hit, no-run game as he pitched his team to a 6-0 victory over Standard Linen in a Metro Night League game.

After McBain had held the Standard batsmen hitless for six innings and retired two men in the first half of the seventh, a Golub player made an error which allowed the batter to reach first safely. The next man up, Standard's First Baseman Green, knocked out a double for his team's only hit of the game and destroying McBain's perfect game.

Triple-Play Features Goodwill Victory

A triple play from Karas to Kuehling to W. C. Stefanson, of the Goodwill Industries Boys Club, was the feature of the trouncing which the Goodwill Insects administered to the Rock Creek Ramblers yesterday, 12 to 4. The game was played on the north diamond of the Ellipse.

Veterans' Netmen Win

Aided by four defaults, the Veterans Administration tennis team yesterday defeated the SEC 5—0, on the Mall courts in a Departmental League match. Erana and Silva, Veterans, defeated Kaufman and Barnouw, 6—3, 6—8, in the only match played.

Qualifying Play Begins Today In Maryland

Roger Peacock is the main hope of a small District delegation in the nineteenth Maryland State Amateur golf championship that starts today at Rolling Road, with an 18-hole qualifying round. Peacock divides the favorite's role with the host club ace, Spencer Overton, who is hard to beat anywhere and will be doubly tough over his home layout.

Peacock and Volney Burnett, both former champions from Indian Spring, played the course yesterday in a practice round with Ralph Bogart and Gillie Young, of the same club, and Peacock and Bogart were each within a stroke of par.

Other local players who are potential winners are three members of the younger generation. Buddy Sharkey, Billy Dettweiler and Dick Meyer, in addition to Southpaw Earl McAleer, and Capital's Billy Houghton and George Molloy.

Minus Defending Champion Otto Greiner, the Baltimore delegation will still be hard to beat over the Catonsville course. Match play rounds tomorrow and Sunday follow today's qualifying round.

Deadlines Near In 3 Tournaments

Juniors and the women golfers are reminded that entry lists for three tournaments near the deadline today. Mrs. H. J. Simons is accepting entries for the women's duffers event scheduled next Tuesday at Manor, until 1 p. m. today.

Maryland junior entries close tomorrow with Emmet Gary at 16 McClellan place, Baltimore, for the 36-hole medal event Tuesday at Woodmont. All sons of U. S. G. A. Club members are eligible, under 21, with various age classes and prizes provided.

Yanks Crush White Sox, 6-1; Sweep Series

By the Associated Press.

New York, June 22.—The World Champion Yankees, co-ordinating their forces with customary success, crushed the Chicago White Sox, 6-1, today to sweep their three-game series and bring their season's record against the Pale Hose to nine victories and one defeat.

Atley Donald, 27-year-old rookie righthander, spaced eight hits with good effect to earn his eighth triumph without a scratch while his hard-hitting teammates provided adequate assistance although getting only one more safety than their opponents.

Little Tavern Beats Police Boys Club, 6-3

The Little Tavern baseball team tightened its lead in the Washington Boys Club yesterday by defeating the Police Boys Club No. 4, 6-3, on the West Ellipse.

Holding the losers to four hits, Heinie Lancaster won his own game when he tripled to make the score 5-3 and came in with the final run himself. The Tavern nine is undefeated in five starts.

5 in the afternoon, and took no chances on running into real trouble. He played the second round with a wet towel around his head, to relieve a headache.

Spencer, who plays in and out golf, owed his success mainly to two holes, the par 5s, 7th and 16th, that he played in 5 under par. He had an eagle, via a 6-foot putt, on the 7th, and a birdie, and chipped for one-putts twice on the long 16th. His only real bad hole was the second, where he missed the green in two, and then 3-putted. Spencer had four other birdies, one on his longest putt of the day, a 15-footer. He finished by hooking two woods shots for bogeys on the 17th and 18th, costing a sub-par total.

Triner was the lone dissenter on the ten-man committee on the question of "I'll moider dat bum" Galento. Triner ranked Tony fifth in the heavyweight first ten.

A glance over the heavyweight ratings quickly confirms the sad state of affairs in that division, where Max Baer—who has sworn not to don another glove—is rated fourth. Here's how they line up behind the Brown Bomber:

Tony Galento, No. 1; Bob Pastor, No. 2; Lou Nova, No. 3; Max Baer, No. 4; Tommy Farr, No. 5; Red Burman, No. 6; William Reddish, No. 7; Roscoe Toles, No. 8; Johnny Paycheck, No. 9, and Tom Kenneally, No. 10.

Red Sox Beat Browns, 7 to 3

By the Associated Press

Boston, June 22.—The Red Sox took the odd game of the series with the St. Louis Browns today, 7 to 3, as Jack Wilson tossed 6-hit ball to win his fourth game of the year.

Wilson shut out the Brownies in all except the sixth inning, when they made half of their hits and all of their runs. Myril Hoag tripled and Sullivan doubled before any one was out, and, after two more men walked to fill the bases, John Berardino singled to drive home two more runs.

(WJSV-General Mills Broadcaster.)

Jimmy Bloodworth is awarded the chief share of points in the Man of the Month Contest based on performances in the 8-5 victory over the Indians yesterday. The points were distributed as follows:

To Bloodworth, three points, because he contributed a pair of important two-baggers to the Nats' attack, driving two runs home and scoring a third.

To Harry Kelley, two points, because he held the Indians to two runs after his rough first inning.

To Sammy West, two points, because he made two hits, driving in a run on each occasion.

To George Case, one point, because he made a hit and stole a base that led to a run.

To Buddy Lewis, one point, because he made a two-bagger that figured in a run and singled, scoring a second run.

Silva's Cut Eye Cancels Fight Here

The Leo Rodak-Mexican Joe Silva 10-round fight scheduled for Griffith stadium Monday was canceled yesterday as Jack Laken, Silva's manager, informed Matchmaker Goldie Ahearn that his fighter will be unable to appear because of a severe cut over his eye.

Silva, who boxed an eight-round charity bout Wednesday night in Hagerstown, had an old cut opened and will have to stay out of the ring about 10 days, it was said.

After calling every fight manager this side of the Mississippi River, Ahearn last night said efforts to put on a boxing show Monday did not produce a suitable card and "rather than put on an inferior show, we will wait until we can get a good fight in here."

Richardson, Turner Meet Today in Junior Davis Cup Final

Dark Horse Conceded Good Chance to Beat Rival at Army-Navy Courts in Windup

Eddie Richardson, unseeded and untouted "dark horse," recorded his second upset in as many days at Army-Navy yesterday to move into the final round of the Junior Davis Cup tennis tournament together with second-seeded Billy Turner.

Richardson, who had eliminated junior champion and top-seeded Harry Brinkerhoff the day before, defeated Jack Hoyt in straight sets, 6—2, 6—3, while Turner got by Maurice Cowan, 2—6, 6—4, 6—2.

They meet for the title vacated by Allie Ritzenberg at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

Richardson, setting his own pace and making Hoyt play that way, was so impressive that many observers conceded him a fine chance to defeat Turner and complete his surprising tournament performance which has seen him account for two of the four seeded players.

Change of Strategy

Only in the first few games of the first set and midway of the second set which he eased up behind a 3-0 lead was Richardson seriously troubled by the hard-hitting but erratic Hoyt, who failed to capitalize his superior height and reach at the net.

Turner, losing the first set to an opponent for the thrid straight day, had more trouble than he bargained for in the 16-year-old Cowan and had to call upon all of his greater stamina and experience to bring him to victory. Cowan, improving steadily, worried Turner with his fine service which has a pronounced top spin, and made him hustle continually.

18 'Queens' Study Mascot Methods At Griffith Stadium

Everyone of them a "queen," 18 Washington girls yesterday took their first course in "How to Be a Successful Mascot for a Baseball Club" at Griffith Stadium before the Nats-Cleveland game in preparation for the softball game July 6 between Congressional and newspapermen's teams.

The girls, who interviewed the Nats' bat boy for advice, will furnish inspiration for the game, which will be for the benefit of the National Library for the Blind. Each team will pick a mascot.

Cosmopolitan Club Golf Tourney Held

Robert W. McChesney and Fred Bamman took top honors yesterday in the Cosmopolitan Club's golf tourney staged at its annual outing at Manor Country Club.

McChesney won first prize with an 85 low gross, and Bamman won second with a 70 low net. Second low gross was taken by Dr. Francis M. Murray with an 87, while Edmund O. Carl, president of the Cosmopolitan Club, and A. W. Lee tied for second low net with 74.

Jack McKeaveny, Marzel Hoppe, Paul Holmes, Roger Hall and Jimmy LeMay were initiated into the club at a banquet which followed the tourney. Ed Randels headed the initiation committee and Maurice Colbert headed the golf committee.

Pirates Score 2 in 9th, Beat Giants, 8-7

By International News Service.

Pittsburgh, June 22.—The Pirates today nipped the New York Giants, 8 to 7, with a two-run rally in the ninth inning.

It was a bitter defeat for the Giants who had come from behind a six-run disadvantage to hold a one-run edge entering the last frame.

Fletcher and Handley singled and, after Young hit into a double play, Mueller doubled to score Fletcher. Then Bowman, last of four Pirate pitchers, won his own game by doubling to bring in Mueller.

The Giants also used four hurlers, Coffman being tagged with the defeat.

St. Louis, June 22.—Young Morton Cooper was just about perfect as a relief pitcher today, hurling five shutout innings and getting three hits in three times at bat, as the St. Louis Cardinals defeated Philadelphia, 11 to 5.

The Cards staked the Phils to all their runs, including a homer by Emmet Mueller, before breaking into the scoring column. Kirby Higbe's wildness helped them to four runs in the fouth inning.

Cubs and Dean Beat Bees, 7-1; Five in Row

By International News Service.

Chicago, June 22.—Dizzy Dean and Augie Galan today shared the honors as the Cubs turned back the Boston Bees, 7 to 1, for their fifth straight victory.

Galan sparked the Chicago assault, contributing a home run with the bases full during the five run show the Cubs put on in the second inning. Galan also got two other hits.

Dean held the bees to six hits, while his teammates were banging out 11.

Baxter Wins Wrestling Bout When Hader Is Disqualified

Forsaking his original plan to act the gentleman, Jack Hader flaunted his true color—a deep, villainous purple—in the face of Laverne Baxter last night at Turner's Arena and was disqualified by Referee Casey Berger.

Hader, ever the nobleman, entered the ring and was a gentleman the better part of a minute. He became so enraged at Baxter's peculiar habit of trying to gouge out his eyes that he seized Laverne, banged his skull against a ring post and then tossed him to the delighted spectators.

The unhappy Baxter made several attempts to climb back in the ring, but Hader—by this time a raging Mr. Hyde—constantly kept him in row A with well-placed kicks. After 24 minutes of conduct of this sort, Referee Casey Berger disqualified Hader, giving Baxter the match. The 1,400 spectators arose as one and shouted all manner of unpleasantries at Berger . . . for stopping the match at this point but as he saw it there was no sense in permitting the match to continue when it was impossible for him to get the raging Hader to permit his opponent back in the ring.

During the early part of the match Laverne Baxter was something of a terror himself. He constantly kept rubbing Hader's eyes with the tape he wore on his right hand and used other foul tactics against Hader. For the reason the fans felt that Hader should have the same privilege his opponent had during the early minutes of the match, but the referee thought differently and disqualified the spectators' choice.

In the preliminaries, Jim Clinstock won over Ed White in 10½ minutes; Pete Managoff won over King Kong after the latter was disqualified; Janjo Singh defeated Tiger Joe Marsh in 14 minutes with a cobra hold; Jules Strongbow won over Chief Chewaki in 21 minutes

Wilmington, Del., June 22 (AP).—Ralph Adair, of Washington, D. C., was eliminated in the third round of the Delaware State clay court tennis championship today at the Du Pont Country Club by sixth-seeded Darrell Hudlow, of Los Angeles, Calif., 6—2, 6—1.

Hudlow's victory placed him in the quarter-final round, where he is bracketed with Frank Guernsey.

Riggs Gains Semifinals In London

By the Associated Press.

London, June 22.—The battle for the London Grass Court Men's singles title today developed into a four-nation affair with Bobby Riggs, of Chicago carrying America's hopes into the semi-finals.

Riggs reached the round of four with a 6—0, 6—3 victory over Emil Gabory, of Hungary as Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Ore., the last surviving American, was eliminated by Baron Gottfried von Cramm, of Germany. Cramm triumphed 6—2, 4—6, 6—1 and meets Riggs in tomorrow's semi-finals.

The other semi-finalists will be E. G. Collins, of England and Chaus Mohammed, of India.

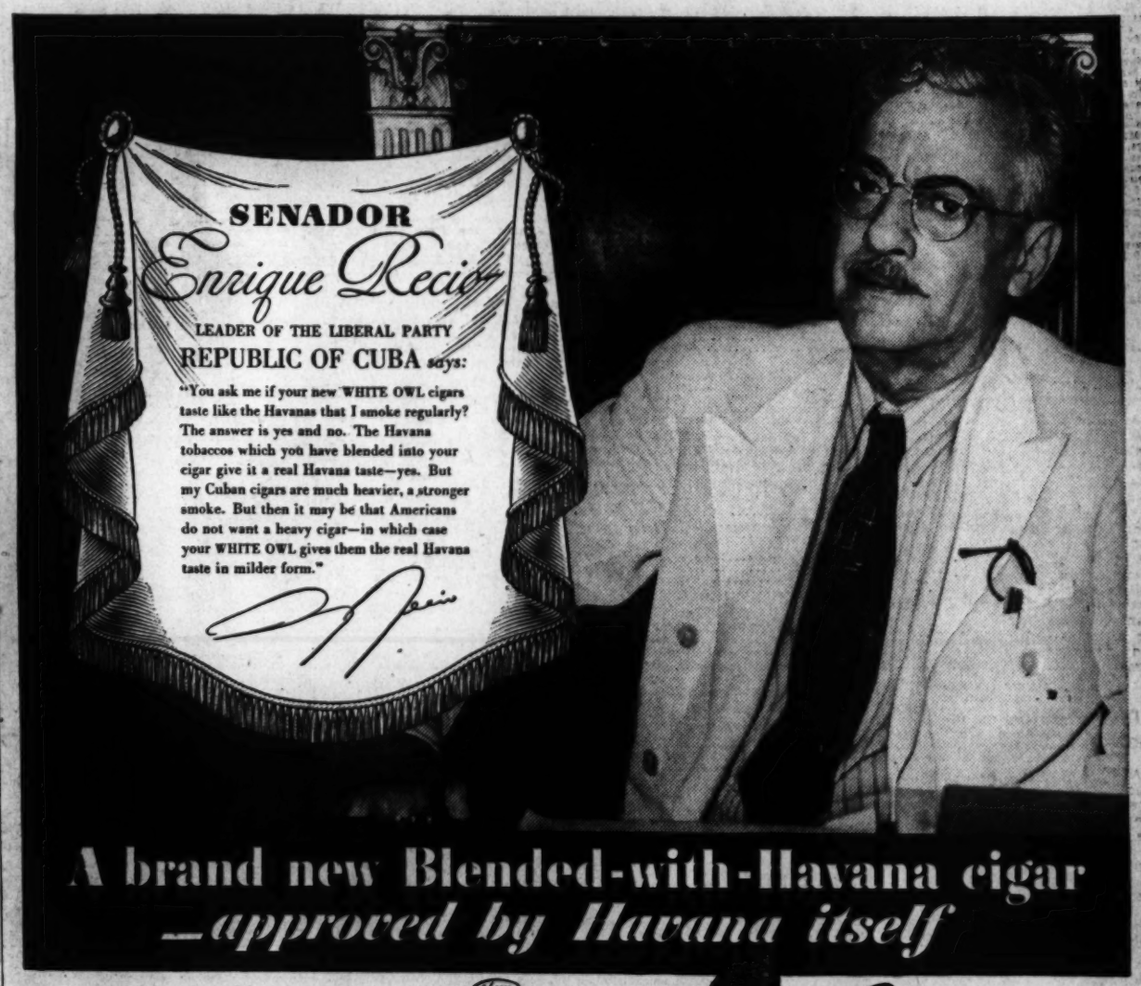
A Message from a Senator of Cuba

TO AMERICAN SMOKERS



SENADOR Enrique Recio

LEADER OF THE LIBERAL PARTY REPUBLIC OF CUBA says:

"You ask me if your new WHITE OWL cigars taste like the Havanas that I smoke regularly? The answer is yes and no. The Havana tobaccos which you have blended into your cigar give it a real Havana taste—yes. But my Cuban cigars are much heavier, a stronger smoke. But then it may be that Americans do not want a heavy cigar—in which case your WHITE OWL gives them the real Havana taste in milder form."

A brand new Blended-with-Havana cigar —approved by Havana itself

DOWN IN HAVANA, they really know the taste of Havana tobacco—you can bet on that. So we took the new Blended-with-Havana White Owl down there to test it. We selected prominent Cubans—real connoisseurs of cigars . . . gave them some of the new White Owls to smoke. Without exception they all praised the rich Havana flavor of this new cigar.

We feel awfully proud of this new cigar. We're proud of the Havana tobacco we use in it . . . it's a really good grade. Does that sound unbelievable for a 5¢ cigar? Well, we are America's largest buyers of Havana tobacco and we know what we are talking about. Fact is, it's the same type of Havana tobacco that is used in popular cigars costing 10¢ and more. And there's a generous helping of this tobacco in each White Owl, too.

We could go on and on telling you about the new White Owl, but the only way for you to find out how good it really tastes is to smoke one. If you enjoy a good cigar, try one of the new White Owls today. Your taste will tell you why it wins the honors—even in Havana.

New INVINCIBLE

Your choice of 2 shapes

Another "10¢" feature—now yours for 5¢ . . . a choice of shapes to suit your smoking taste. A long, trim, new Invincible. And a rich, full-bodied, new Club House shape. You get the same amount of tobacco—the same mild blend in either size—only the shape varies.

Roman Boy Wins Feature Race at Charles Town in Mud

Bad Actors Cause 12-Minute Delay At Post; Double Pays Backers $25.60

By Walter Haight

A Staff Correspondent.

Charles Town, W. Va., June 22.—P. H. Faulconer's Roman Boy put further emphasis on his designation as sprint champion of Charles Town by galloping off to a four-length victory in today's feature race. Having won twice on fast tracks and again on a slow oval, Roman Boy revealed that he can run on any track by going in excellent fashion on a sloppy surface.

The race was run an hour after a driving storm hit the track and sent the water down in torrents. However, the sun was trying to get a peep in as the field of eight lined up for the 4½-furlong sprint.

As has been the case in all his races here, Roman Boy was installed the favorite and his legion of backers found the $3.40 win mutuel satisfactory.

The son of Ha Ha and Roman Girl was excellently handled by Jockey Sammy Palumbo and stepped the route in a creditable 0:51 1-5.

There was a delay of 12 minutes at the post while Starter Morrissey and his crew tried to get the unruly gang into alignment. Roman Boy was among the worst actors. Romney Royal broke up several stars and finally was ordered on the outside of the gates.

When the bell came Romney Royal leaped to the front but Roman Boy soon supplanted him. Once in front, Palumbo rated Roman Boy and Traunmerei moved up. In the stretch Palumbo asked the colt for speed and he drew out in good fashion.

Those 1 nthe June 22 crowd who played the "date hunch" collected a $25.60 daily double on the "2 and 2" combination.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—SPARKLING, $6.60, $3.20, $2.60; FREDALVA, $3.00, $2.60; CHIRIQUI, $2.80.

SPARKLING, first away, saved ground to open lead at turn and held on gamely when threatened by FREDALVA in stretch run. FREDALVA was closest to pace from start and closed gamely under drive. CHIRIQUI was allowed to settle into stride, came wide for racing room and made up much ground. STEPPING IN moved up menacingly approaching stretch and weakened. SHORTS went evenly. SOUPCON had early speed and stopped. The others were outrun.

SECOND RACE—Six and one-half furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:00. Off 3:03½. Winner, H. M. Johnson's br. f. (4), by Tony Griffith—May Lave. Trained by P. F. Casey. Value to winner, $300; second, $60; third, $30; fourth, $10. Time, 1:21.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BEN GRIFFITH, $11.80, $5.40, $4.60; PUKKA HEAVEN, $3.40, $3.20; GROUCHNEUR, $13.60.

BEN GRIFFITH saved ground in early stages, came with good energy while going to leader and ran out approaching end while under punishment to finish on outside fence. PUKKA HEAVEN, slow to begin, came with rush on inside, but was held safe. GROUCHNEUR saved ground while setting pace and was weakened. DOUBLE ON SEA had speed in spots. JIMMY S. cut over at break and stopped after going forwardly. WILD DAY was blocked by JIMMY S. directly after start.

WEATHER, RAINING. TRACK, FAST.

THIRD RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start poor. Won driving; place same. Went to post 3:28. Off 3:32½. Winner, W. W. Giff's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SELDOMGO, $5.80, $3.00, $2.80; TRIVET, $4.40, $3.40; DOLLED UP, $7.00.

SELDOMGO, sent to front at once, opened lead and was kept to drive to end. TRIVET could not get through entering stretch while full of run and closed gamely along rail. DOLLED UP showed good effort. FRED'S WARNING went evenly. ROUGH BUDDY quit. DIXIE S. and WOOD KNOT had no chance with the start.

Daily Double, Ben Griffith and Seldomgo, Paid $25.60.

WEATHER, RAINING. TRACK, SLOPPY.

FOURTH RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $400; claiming. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 3:56. Off 4:01½. Winner, B. J. B. Bond's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—SMALL CHANGE, $7.40, $4.40, $2.80; ROCKY MOUNT, $4.20, $2.20; NOTORIETY, $3.60.

SMALL CHANGE came up on inside to get to front in opening eighth, drew out and opened gap in stretch to win easily. ROCKY MOUNT was hard ridden and came willingly while held safe at end. NOTORIETY had to be hard rushed to gain forward position and weakened. PROTEUS went evenly. MENANA ran out at first turn.

FIFTH RACE—Charles Town course. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place same. Went to post 4:25½. Off 4:28½. Winner, A. S. Hamilton, Jr.'s. gr. m. Two-dollar mutuels paid—MISS WING, $25.80, $7.00, $3.40; NIGHT PLAY, $3.40, $2.80; FRED ALMY, $2.80.

MISS WING forged to front at first turn, shook off challenge of FRED ALMY on backstretch and drew out, but was kept to drive to end. NIGHT PLAY was forward factor from start and closed gamely. FRED ALMY came willingly. WELSH LAD was forced wide at turn and failed to rally. LILTEEN was through early.

WEATHER, CLOUDY. TRACK, SLOPPY.

SIXTH RACE—About 4½ furlongs. Purse, $500. For 3-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place driving. Went to post 4:54½. Off 5:06½. Winner, P. H. Faulconer's ch. c. (3), by Haha—Roman Girl. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CANTER BELLE, $7.80, $4.40, $4.20; GESTURE, $3.40, $3.40; HERLERO, $6.80.

CANTER BELLE, steadied along after getting to front early, disposed of BELLTHORN, drew clear easily and had speed in reserve at end. GESTURE improved position readily on backstretch, but was held safe. HERLERO saved ground and showed good effort. TULEYRIES STAR could not reach contention. LACEY MISS ran out badly at all turns. BELLTHORN stopped badly.

EIGHTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $400; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won handily; place driving. Went to post 5:59. Off 6:01. Winner, Mrs. C. L. Payne's b. g. Nats Pound Five Hurlers, Beat Indians account. He pitched a single to Hemsley, walked Campbell, pitched a single to Chapman and then saw Gelbert muff a double-play ball off Heath's bat. One run was across and the bases were full of Indians.

Hal Trosky moved a second run home with a fly to George Chase and Keltner drove him the third run of the inning with the first of his five hits—a single to left. The uprising subsided when Lewis grabbed Grimes' grounder and nipped Heath at the plate, and Webb grounded to Gelbert.

That 3-0 lead shrank to 3-1 by the end of the first inning, after Lewis, with two out, had lashed a double to left and Gelbert produced a single to left, and in the second inning the Nats went townward to the extent of five hits and four more runs.

Zuber Loses Control

But the Nats resumed almost immediately. Case singled to left and Sam West, batting for Welaj, singled to center, to score Kelley. Then Zuber lost his control and walked Lewis and Gelbert to force the fourth run of the inning home. Dobson got the pitching job then. Bobby Estalella popped up with the bases full and Bloodworth, up for a second time, fanned.

In the fourth, the Nats upped their lead to 7 to 3 after Lewis had beaten out a hit to Grimes and Gelbert beat out a slow roller to Zuber. Bloodworth came along with a two-bagger to center, to drive both of his pals home. And in the sixth, George Case inspired the Nats' eighth run by drawing a walk, stealing second, to the great embarrassment of Sullivan, who threw to first with Case on his way to second. West ripped a single to right, to score him.

There was no doubt about the Indians' fourth run. It was Trosky's homer over the right field wall in the fifth, and their final run as equally untainted. It was Keltner's homer into the center field bleachers in the sixth. But when the Indians weren't hitting homers, they weren't making any more runs off Kelley.

ACKERMAN

In spite of the rain up above, the Potomac was running almost clear late Wednesday afternoon and getting better hourly. For the next week or ten days, this closeby fishing, so easily available for those who feel the necessity of showing up at the office for at least part of the day, should be at its best. Unless we miss our guess, and barring further rain, it will never be any better, for not only is the run of stripers at the peak, but the moon will be dark.

Swell catches have been made almost every day this week. "Little Joe" Fletcher went out long enough to hang on to a 5-pounder. "Buck" Schafer, George Schafer's young hopeful, had nine on the same day; everyone better than four pounds. Bill Rudeman's string was counted at eight, and running up to six pounds.

And, just in case there might be some river angler who wouldn't count that as good enough to roll out an hour or two early, the catfish are running big and plentiful. Five pounds seems to be about the general average although several strings of smaller ones were noted.

Game Fish

Some anglers, new to this country, stick their noses up at the mention of catfish. Probably because they have known them in quieter waters, where they are never at their best. Here, their taking is something else. They are a game fish if we know the meaning of the word at all, and with the right kind of tackle will take any angler over the jumps.

For bait, herring-sides or soft crabs is the best for the stripers; and so that you won't be disappointed, Joe Fletcher hasn't any on hand. Take it with you. For the catfish, shad or chicken entrails is tops, but bloodworms, cut bait and even shrimp are almost as acceptable.

Last minute information is best obtained direct from Joe Fletcher at New Cut and Canal road. His phone is Woodley 4751. His boats are in good shape and the usual buck a day. Outboards may be used if you have the equipment required by the steamboat inspectors. We can't recommend their use in these waters, however, for their use disturbs not only the fish, but the fishermen. Particularly if they are in the hands of those who persist in coming close to you.

Rockfishing Slow

Striper fishing in the lower river and bay continues to show about the same returns in catches as last week. Boats from St. Georges, Riverview and Piney Point are fishing the Tall Timbers area, where Capt. R. M. Rogers has been reporting consistant catches running from 30 to 70 and better. Some of them weighing "15 pounds."

At Solomons, the rockfishing isn't up to what it was several weeks ago, but the hardheads have taken the boats by storm, from the mouth of the river out to the channel, on the Chinese Mud and on up to Cove Point. The catches were even more than fair over last week-end with a falling barometer and a northeaster making. In addition Capt. Joe Lore points out the fact they are taking the hook just as well in the morning as in the evening; that drifting is supplying the best sport, and that with almost every catch some trout are being taken. Running in weight from 1½ to 3 pounds. Not bad when you consider that it is still early for the run so far up.

Becker's fleet at Breezy Point, Commodore Tom Jones, Eastern Shore Fleet at North Beach and Herring Bay boats, most of the fishing being done on the Gooses, are continuing to bring in large catches. The going should be even better for the next ten days because it is the dark and last quarter of the moon.

Bait-Fishing Useless

With but another week to go on the present Maryland trout season; conditions aren't any too good for the ordinary angler. Clear water, and low—extremely low. Bait-fishing is useless, wet-fly fishing little better and the real dry-fly fisherman in his glory; for the fish are in the deep tails of the pools and wary.

The belief of stream fishermen, that the trout must never see you is true now, if it ever was. Light guts, dry flies well presented from below, in either early morning or late evening—and there are bound to be some nice creels taken before the first of July.

In Jersey and Delaware offshore waters Boston mackerel are continuing to be caught in spite of the lateness of the run. The bonita have arrived along with small schools of blues. Big weakies are on the wrecks and at the Delaware Breakwater. Smaller editions in the inlets with the run of summer flounders just getting under way. A few channel bass on the Delaware beaches until last week. The water should be clear by today, not only at Bethany and Rehoboth, but on down to Cape the first day they could get back. And a wise idea, which we are noting now for Washington anglers, for, despite the greatly augmented fleet of marlin boats, bookings are being made far up in August. A perfectly natural sequence, bound beyond any doubt to follow last season, when records for any white marlin fishing port in the world were shattered, almost beyond belief. A season that saw 500 fish brought in during the first five weeks—39 in one day—eight to a party of four on one boat—910 on the thirty-odd charter boats, more than 1,000 counting privately owned cruisers from the Jersey Coast, in a total of 73 fishing days (none counted off for bad weather).

In view of such fishing it is little wonder anglers who have been making long trips for big game fish, are grabbing at the chance to get it at home. Almost in the front yard, so to speak, of half a dozen large cities with a population, that according to angling statistics should have, without women, nearly 1,750,000 fishermen. Counting out those who are satisfied with smaller sports, and those unable to afford marlin fishing, as well as many others for various and sundry reasons, there are still enough left to tax the capacity of the fleet. For that reason, if it is possible, make your reservations now for the time you expect to make your trip in July or August—even the the first week or two in September might not be too late.

Just before crossing the bridge into Ocean City, and on the right, is Trimpers Railway and docks with several marlin boats, in particular Capt. Jim Whaley and his Empris II, one of the first to fish the big fish out of Ocean City. His phone is 145.

Good Captains

In Ocean City, at the far end, is the new yacht basin, where Charles, and this week-end should see the big spot-tails again feeding just outside the break.

From now on, for anglers fishing the North Carolina coast, it will be offshore until the channel bass start running again in July. Cobia, barracuda, amberjack and dolphin are supplying a brand of sport that is almost comparable to that found in southern Florida. One party, fishing out of Morehead City this past week, caught 50 dolphin running up to 20 pounds and one 25-pound cobia on the shoals of Lookout.

The northeaster probably slowed up the cobia fishing down the lower Virginia shore, because we haven't received a report this week. There is little doubt in our mind, however, that it is worth trying now. The trout should be coming in stronger, and possibly a few blues with them. Like every other place on the Chesapeake and the Potomac, it is doubtful if the hardheads have ever stopped biting, although some places experienced a slight lull on Sunday in midday.

285-Pound Bail Fish

The real interest in fishing, due to the catch of the first marlin of the season, has shifted to Ocean City, Md. The 285-pound billfish was taken on Friday. On Saturday practically every boat in the fleet was out, and chartered for Sunday, although the blow put an effective stop to fishing, even for those who would have been satisfied to fish the wrecks for the porgies and sea bass that are so thick they have run the weakfish off.

The boats were held in on both Monday and Tuesday also, with more than a few disappointed parties, but making reservations for several of the old-timers have taken up new quarters. The Bunting docks at the foot of Talbot street, where the phone is 131. The first street after turning left off the bridge is Magee Yacht Basin, where nearly 25 Marlin boats are docked. The phone here is 10. If you have no choice of guides, the reservations will be taken in turns, and this year there is no chance of getting a captain that doesn't know his business, or a boat that isn't capable and thoroughly equipped for offshore work, for this season the basin is being run by Capt. Crawford Savage, and he isn't taking any chances on boats with partial equipment. The Game Fishermen's Association pennant is another safeguard of complete inspection for ability to make the long runs offshore in safety.

At this dock this year will be about 25 charter boats that will compare favorably with the fleet of any port along the Atlantic coast. That goes for Florida, too. In fact, this year will see many of the well known Miami and Palm Beach guides running out of here.

Capt. Victor Lance, who for years has fished the big fellows out of Palm Beach and the lately opened Shonnard Camp at Walker Key, in the Bahamas, is already there with his new twin-engined Torobil. He'll be just as hard to beat as Capt. Leo Droughton, of Miami Beach, and his Sampan, which holds not only the world's record catch on white marlin, but the Atlantic record on wahoo, and who will be up sometime during the first week in July. Capt. Frank Sauderback, of Palm Beach, will be skipper of a local boat, the Mione.

Capt. Fred Savage and his Seagull who holds the daily record of eight white marlin made on July 12 last year. Capt. Lev Raymond, the Atlantic City tuna guide, with his Lev-Lou not only in apple-pie order, but with many new innovations. Capt. Chester Gray with the Hilda, Capt. Jesse Bloxam and the Miss Ocean City, this year twin-engined and one of the fishinist boats in the fleet regardless of her 32 feet. Capt. Jim Lombard with his Jim Dandie and Capt. Jim (Reds) Hall on the Baltimore boat Cutty Sark. Capt. Crawford Savage with his repowered Hilda II that has been top boat for the past two years. Counting released fish, of which there was many, Crawford's total for 1938 numbered 67 marlin. That's nearly a fish a day for the whole season. Read Bob Edge's story, "Hitting the Jack Spot," in July Field and Stream if you have never marlin fished and want to know what a day after the jumping-jacks is like with the dean of Ocean City guides.

These notes for the most wonderful Northern fishing to be had by anglers, at a price within their means, has called forth all sorts of letters in the past. We set it down to the best of our ability. If the names of a few appear often, it is because they keep us in almost daily touch with what is going on. Water temperatures, number caught and where, in fact everything that it takes to give you a first-hand picture of what is going on. Additional information, if you don't find just what you want, will be on tap at any time by calling The Washington Post. We don't, however, want to make reservations and will not for anyone. If you want to do that locally, get in touch with Milton Gordon at the Atlas Sport Store. He knows the men as well as the boats. The standard rate is $35 a day which includes everything but the lunch; the larger boats are $40. Four persons is the usual party, which makes it more than reasonable for this type of fishing.

Boating a 40-pound channel bass is one way of working off those xcess midsection inches, if this two-man struggle is any guage. The gentleman on the right supplies the brawn while his partner stands by with the gaff. The pair are fishing from a boat in the sloughs off Ocracoke Island, N. C., where red drum fishing is the leading salt water sport

Dairy Admits Bootlegging, Gets $10 Fine

Other Charges Against Fairfax Farms Killed; Faulkner Posts Bond

Another chapter in Washington's stormy "bootleg" milk row closed in Police Court yesterday when Fairfax Farms Dairy, through its president, James J. Ward, entered a plea of guilty to importing cream into the District without a Health Department permit and was fined $10, the maximum. The Government nolle possed nine other counts growing from the same transaction.

At the same time, Whiting C. Faulkner, former postmaster at Martinsburg, W. Va., appeared in District Court and posted a bond of $1,500 on charges of perjury before the House milk investigation subcommittee.

The cases nolle prossed by Corporation Counsel Seal included one against the Embassy Dairy for failing to have proper markings on its trucks. Failure to have a Health Department permit to import 2,000 gallons of cream from Lafayette, Ind., was the principal count against Fairfax.

"Cream Passed Rigorous Tests"

After imposition of the fine by Judge John P. McMahon, Ward issued the following statement:

"The charge to which the Fairfax Dairy pleaded guilty is that of bringing into the District of Columbia a shipment of cream without having first obtained a Health Department permit.

"This cream, after its seizure, was subjected to analysis by the District health officer and was found, according to the official report, to be of a quality equal to that produced in the Washington milkshed. It also passed the most rigorous tests for purity.

"This analysis was further confirmed by testimony before the House District Committee, which also disclosed that samples of Embassy-Fairfax Dairies milk tested by the Department of Agriculture showed that it had the third lowest bacteria count of any Washington dairy, with an average bacteria count of 2,700, while the Health Department minimum is 40,000."

Before accepting the guilty plea, Judge McMahon made certain the fine would be paid. The charge was filed against the dairy as a corporation, and the judge observed "We all know a corporation can't be jailed in default of a fine payment."

He was quickly assured by Defense Counsel Robert Lynch and the fine was paid before he left court.

Eight continuances were granted before the case finally reached court yesterday. The cream was imported March 4 and was seized at the Fairfax storage plant in the rear of 1620 First street northwest, after the shipment had been trailed through many States by metropolitan police investigators.

The seizure fired a controversy which found its way to Capitol Hill and a formal House inquiry. It was from this inquiry that the perjury case against Whiting Faulkner developed.

Although United States Attorney Fine issued a bench warrant for Faulkner's arrest, the accused subcommittee witness surrendered yesterday and was fingerprinted and photographed before posting his bond. Arraignment was set for a week from today.

Job Losses Feared

B. B. Derrick, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland-Virginia Milk Producers Association, said yesterday that between 1,500 and 2,000 farm workers will have to be discharged if the Schulte bill to open the Washington milk market becomes a law.

The Schulte bill, he said, "repeals all existing regulations, promulgated as a result of years of work and experience, governing the production, handling and sale of milk and substitutes indefinite regulations primarily designed for communities with inferior supplies and in need of assistance."

Besides bringing about a sharp reduction in the quality of milk sold in Washington, Derrick said, the bill would destroy the large investments in plant equipment of many farmers in Maryland and Virginia and would destroy the bargaining power of the farm co-operative.

Large dairy companies would benefit by the competition, he said, by shifting purchases from one territory to another. The large distributors could take advantage of the wider production market, he said, to the detriment of the small dairy.

In a parallel analysis of the Schulte bill and present District health requirements, the Maryland-Virginia Association pointed out that:

Adoption of the Public Health Service code would permit the sale of three grades of milk, instead of the one Grade A as at present, for the first 12 months, "after which only Grade A can be sold except in temporary periods when Grade B and C can be sold after producer has been degraded from Grade A."

Whereas the District regulations require annual tuberculin tests of cows, the Schulte bill would not require such tests in counties that qualify as "modified accredited counties."

Arno, Cabot in Battle of Looks For Favor of Brenda Frazier

By the United Press.

New York, June 22.—One of those brutal cafe society brawls, in which a correctly lifted eyebrow counts for a point on the score sheet and a deft sneer wins the round, almost came to blows today at La Conga.

It was a dispute over a girl named Brenda Frazier, who wears this season's glamour medal among the stay-up-late set, and the principals, hitherto unmatched, were Peter Arno, who has been training at the Stork Club, and Bruce Cabot, the Hollywood Hope.

Franklin Delano Roosevelt, jr., who knows how to throw a punch, served as a kind of silent second to Cabot, grinning broadly at the bon mots his man offered in the early rounds when the boys were feeling each other out.

The gong—and if ever a fight needed a gong this one did—sounded about 3:30 a. m. and the ringside tables were well filled. Mario Tosatti, the club promoter, seemed pleased with the gate.

Arno entered the arena first with Miss Frazier on his arm. They went directly to a prominently placed table and sat down to wait.

About two hours later Cabot entered with the younger Roosevelt. Cabot revealed to a waiter that he was looking for Miss Frazier, who has so far been very negative about talk of appearing in a picture with him.

"Brenda told us to come down," Cabot said.

Miss Frazier was by no means inconspicuous in a white ermine jacket and Cabot approached, looking supremely confident, as befits a movie actor in the presence of a lady. He bent over the table and made as if to sit down.

It was noted that Arno and Cabot did not shake hands. Arno's face was flushed a deep red. He threw Cabot a dirty left look but the Hollywood hot shot shook it off and shuffled in for more.

"Go sit at your own table," Arno said, leading again.

After a brief rest he was up again, having thought of something to say, and advanced directly to Arno's corner, who was a little late getting up.

When he did get up the artist was sculpturing his fist into a mess of knckles. For a second or two it looked as though something dreadful might happen.

But nothing did. Hoot Gibson, that hard ridin', straight shootin' cowpuncher, entered the saloon, looked around and sized up the situation at a glance. There wasn't any bar to vault over but he pushed a couple of waiters aside and came between the two. He separated them by saying "Now, now fellows," and Host Tosatti fixed things up by setting Arno and Miss Frazier at another table and Cabot and Roosevelt at another table, far, far away.

It wasn't a very happy ending for Cabot. He didn't get the girl.

FBI Report on D.C. Court Expected

Results of the FBI investigation of the local Police Court probably will be announced in the next few days, Attorney General Murphy said yesterday.

Indicating the study is now in its final stages, Murphy said he expected a full report by next Thursday. The investigation has been going on for several weeks.

'Let Me Die—I've Killed My Wife;' He's Wrong, Saved

Los Angeles, June 22 (AP).—An automobile plunged into Ballona Creek near the Venice Beach today. When police and passersby tried to save the driver from drowning, he screamed:

"Let me die—I've killed my wife."

Officers rescued the driver, Melvin Higgins, while two radio patrolmen rushed to his home. They found the wife, Helen, in bed with a silver carving knife plunged into her abdomen, but still alive.

Officers F. V. Gosselin and S. A. Rosenwald said Higgins confessed later he hit his wife with a flat iron and then stabbed her because "she was interested in another man."

8 Stricken, Food Blamed at Mt. Alto

Eight patients at Mount Alto Hospital were stricken with what doctors believe to be food poisoning, it was learned yesterday.

Dr. Lewis G. Beardsley, director of the hospital, said none of the patients was seriously ill. He said an investigation is under way.

Seas Too Rough For Home-Made Sub

Michigan City, Ind., June 22 (INS). The seas were too rough today for Barney Connett and his one-man submarine and he was forced to abandon his under-water trip to Chicago two hours off the Indiana shore.

He set out in spite of coast guard warnings to small craft, and pretty soon his 10½-foot home-made submersible was bouncing up and down and rolling sidewise about four feet under water. He was trying to beat his former record of miles to the Navy pier in Chicago, 10 hours and 50 minutes for the 37

Posse Captures Slaying Suspect Hour After Escape

Leonardtown, Md., June 22 (AP).—George Washington Matthews, 40, alleged murderer, enjoyed an hour of freedom today after escaping from the St. Marys County Jail.

The colored man, charged with shooting Annie Summerville March 26, wriggled through a 14-inch opening where food is shoved to the prisoners, made his way through a window to the roof, dropped to the ground and sprinted for the nearby woods.

Plastering Firm Seeks Bankruptcy; Debts, $70,618.05

Floyd Jennings, president of the company, signed the papers. Among the debts was an unsecured claim of Jennings for $23,770.09 for legal services to the company in 1938. The largest debt was $38,319.39 to the Liberty National Bank, secured by rights in a contract of the Jennings Co., with the George A. Fuller Co. The value of the contract was described as uncertain.

The assets were $34.84 cash, $500 worth of machinery and $150 worth of office furniture.

Bank Auditors Elect Glasco New Chairman

Section Closes Year With Meeting, Dinner And Dancing

By Thomas M. Cahill.

With 100 members and guests attending, the latter including officers of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, the auditor's section of the latter group closed its latest administrative year last night at Wardman Park Hotel with a business meeting, preceded by a dinner and followed by dancing. H. Norman Glasco, Union Trust Co., is chairman of the section for the new administrative year.

The annual report prepared by Gerald E. Keene, Second National Bank, retiring chairman of the section, showed a successful business year. It reveals that the section was organized in 1928 by representatives of six local banks, and since that time has enjoyed a steady growth, this year there being 59 members on its roll, representing 20 institutions.

The program committee of last year was again headed by Raymond G. Marx, comptroller of the Riggs National Bank. Mr. Marx prepared a program well in advance, and copies of the subjects to be presented were sent to each member. Speakers of exceptional ability, thoroughly qualified to talk on their particular subject, were secured, and interesting discussion followed the talks in every instance.

Year's Speakers

During the past administrative year the section had such prominent speakers as F. W. Selsor, assistant superintendent, surety claims division, Fidelity & Casualty Co. of New York; Robertson Criswold, vice president, Maryland Trust Co., Baltimore, Md., and immediate past president of the trust division of the American Bankers Association; Richard R. Quay, assistant director of the municipal housing division of the Federal Housing Administration; J. E. Heberle, vice president and comptroller of the Capital Transit Co.

On February 20, 1939, the section received a letter from Dr. A. L. Howard, head of the Department of Business Practice, of the Washington, D. C., high schools, requesting it to conduct an audit of five high school banks. Harold M. Denison, auditor of the Bank of Commerce & Savings, was appointed chairman, and the audit was made.

Mr. Keene reports with deep sorrow the death of two members of the section during the year, William M. Offutt, assistant auditor of Washington Loan & Trust Co., who died July 16, 1938, and F. V. M. Cook, auditor of National Metropolitan Bank, who died May 30, 1939. Both had been members of the section for a number of years.

Postoffice Receipts

For a period of ten months, consecutively, receipts at the city postoffice in May were in excess of those of the corresponding month a year ago, reports disclosing this information also noting the steady improvement of business in Washington.

This May increase also aided in keeping revenues for the first five months of this year ahead in a good measure over the corresponding months in 1938. May receipts at the city postoffice totaled $633,168.55 in comparison with $580,183.34 in May, 1938, a gain of $52,985.21, or 9.13 per cent. This was one of the largest monthly increases on record at the local office.

In the first five months of 1939, postal receipts at the Washington office amounted to $3,207,653 against $2,972,220 in the same months in 1938, or an increase in revenues so far this year of $235,433. Although the calendar year improvement in the 5 months' period is noteworthy, the same is true of the first 11 months of the Government's fiscal year. With only one more month ahead, the annual total in postal receipts will be appreciably in advance of the mark for the previous months.

D. C. Construction

The Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond's monthly review reveals that construction contracts awarded in the District of Columbia during April amounted to $9,705,000, as against $1,779,000 in April, 1938, a gain of 439 per cent.

Contracts awarded in the Fifth Federal Reserve District in April, 1939, totaled $42,008,000, highest figure for any month since March, 1930, and were 67 per cent above contracts totaling $25,114,000 awarded in April, 1938. During the first four months of 1939, contract awards totaling $125,620,000 exceeded those made in the first four months of 1938 by 51 per cent.

The District of Columbia led with building permits totaling $2,826,710 in April. Baltimore was second with $1,443,162, and Charlotte, N. C., third with $873,419.

Banking Notes

Bernard J. Nees, of Johnston, Lemon & Co., as a delegate of the Washington Junior Board of Commerce, attended the annual convention of the United States Junior Chamber of Commerce in Tulsa, Okla., this week. He is a director in the local organization.

Frederick P. H. Siddons, secretary of American Security & Trust Co., has left for Haven, Me., for his vacation.

American British Barter Treaty Is Near Completion

London, June 22 (AP).—Officials of the Board of Trade, a Government Department, said today they expected a British-American barter scheme would be completed "shortly." Prime Minister Chamberlain announced last month that the negotiations had opened between the two nations "for exchange of certain raw materials required as strategic reserves in both countries."

Although he declined at that time to specify the materials involved, it has been understood the United States proposed to exchange cotton and wheat for rubber and tin from Britain.

Board of Trade officials today declined to predict when the announcement would be made, but cotton market movements reflected an expectation that the deal would be carried through within 24 or 48 hours.

An assurance that cotton stocks acquired by the British government in the proposed deal would not come on the market for at least 5 years was given at a special committee meeting of the Liverpool cotton Association. The committee was told the stocks, when released, would be handled through ordinary channels.

Weir Lays Steel Nine-Year Losses To Managements

Pittsburgh, June 22 (AP).—Ernest T. Weir today charged the managements of big steel corporations with the "principal responsibility" for the industry's nine-year losing streak and advanced as a solution what he termed a "simple formula of sound common sense."

"Fundamentally there is nothing wrong with our business," explained the recently elected head of the American Iron and Steel Institute, replying to a request for his analysis of the industry's ailments.

'It is principally management that is responsible for our plight. Not politics. Not economics. Not high labor costs. As I've said before, I'm against reducing wages.

"I maintain that if the management of any company is conducted in a sound way it will make profits even at low levels of operation. And there is nothing mysterious about 'sound way.' The only way to make a profit is to sell at a price higher than cost."

Weir's indictment of managements—he cited later the figures from the nine largest concerns as a specific instance—came as the third blast by a prominent independent operator since a series of slashings several months ago set the industry a-jitter.

Bank of England

London, June 22 (AP).—Bank of England statement as of June 21 (in thousands of pounds): Circulation 494,671, decrease 280; bullion 226,869; increase 117; reserves 32,197, increase 397; public deposits 25,336, increase 3,158; private deposits 133,362, decrease 3,333; government securities 113,631, decrease 3,630; other securities 31,662, increase 3,069; ratio of reserve to liabilities, 20.3 per cent, compared with 20.0 last week.

Freight Traffic 14.8 Per Cent Over Year Ago

Total of 637,873 Cars Is a Slight Gain Over The Preceding Week

Loading of revenue freight for the week ended June 17 totaled 637,873 cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. This was an increase of 82,354 cars or 14.8 per cent above the corresponding week in 1938 but a decrease of 114,914 cars or 15.3 per cent below the same week in 1937. Loading of revenue freight for the week of June 17 was an increase of 3,276 cars or five-tenths of 1 per cent above the preceding week.

Miscellaneous freight loading totaled 259,066 cars, an increase of 427 cars above the preceding week, and an increase of 34,750 cars above the corresponding week in 1938.

Loading of merchandise less than carload lot freight totaled 152,502 cars, a decrease of 580 cars below the preceding week, but an increase of 6,194 cars above the corresponding week in 1938.

Coal loading amounted to 100,972 cars, an increase of 957 cars above the preceding week, and an increase of 18,192 cars above the corresponding week in 1938.

Grain Loadings Larger

Grain and grain products loading totaled 38,821 cars, an increase of 4,538 cars above the preceding week, and an increase of 2,253 cars above the corresponding week in 1938. In the Western districts alone, grain, and grain products loading for the week of June 17 totaled 26,993 cars, an increase of 4,504 cars above the preceding week, and an increase of 2,031 cars above the corresponding week in 1938.

Livestock loading amounted to 9,457 cars, a decrease of 303 cars below the preceding week, and a decrease of 607 cars below the corresponding week in 1938. In the Western districts alone, loading of livestock for the week of June 17 totaled 6,557 cars, a decrease of 322 cars below the preceding week, and a decrease of 661 cars below the corresponding week in 1938.

Coke loading amounted to 5,809 cars, an increase of 425 cars above the preceding week, and an increase of 1,658 cars above the corresponding week in 1938.

All districts, except the Southwestern, reported increases compared with the corresponding week in 1938. All districts reported decreases compared with the corresponding week in 1937.

Brokers' Loans Dip $7,00,000 in Week

By the Associated Press.

The Federal Reserve Board reported yesterday that last week's loans to brokers and dealers on securities held by reporting member banks in New York City totaled $517,000,000. The week ended Wednesday and the total represented a decrease of $7,000,000 when compared with the previous week.

Loans for the corresponding week a year ago totaled $515,000,000.

Idle Bank Funds Drop $30,000,000

The Federal Reserve Board said last evening that the lendable excess reserves of banks declined $30,000,000 to a total of $4,230,000,000 in the week ended June 21.

The decline officials said, was partly due to the transfer on June 15 of income tax payments fro.. private deposit accounts to the Treasury.

A. G. Spalding & Bros. Vote to Reorganize

New York, June 22 (AP).—Stockholders of A. G. Spalding & Bros., sporting goods concern, today approved a plan of recapitalization in which a newly formed Delaware corporation will absorb the present New Jersey company.

Lee F. Robbins, president, told stockholders earnings were running substantially ahead of last year, exceeding the company's budgeted figures. Company's main plant is at Chicopee, Mass. Retail outlets are throughout the country.

Prices Dip Fractions in Dull Trading Reaction to Pump-Priming Not Favorable Weakness in Final Hour Supplies Answer

New York, June 22.—The stock market dropped an average of 0.18 point today in trading of 450,480 shares. Prices were weak at the opening and again in the final hour with the greatest setbacks taking place in the steels, metals, motors and better grade rails. The great majority of speculative favorites moved by fractions, United States Rubber and United States Steel losing about a point each and Glenn Martin advancing by 1⅛ points. Statistical news of the day included a gain of 0.5 per cent in carloadings over the previous week and larger sales by some representative chain store systems.

Such items of information, however, fade into insignificance in comparison with the President's announced intention to bring about the borrowing and spending of an additional $3,860,000,000 for another gigantic try at the pump priming mirage as a means of securing recovery. The weakness in the final hour of trading today supplies the answer as to how investors regard this newest attempt to buy prosperity with what you don't have, if any answer were needed.

Credit Breaking Point

We are asked to squander another $3,860,000,000 in an attempt to prove what has already been thoroughly disproven, namely, that by stretching Government credit nearer the breaking point we can make up for the lack of use of private credit. More than six years of pump priming and the 10,000,000 unemployed stand as the monument to the Roosevelt Administration to testify that the laws of man cannot supersede the immutable laws of common sense economics.

There is an election a little more than a year away, and apparently every caution is to be thrown to the wind in an effort to save us from the whirlwind that present policies make virtually inevitable—or is it one last throw of the dice of the group now in control of our affairs which realizes that it must make or break? One thing appears certain beyond any question: It is "break" for the investor, for every wage earner who has saved a few dollars to guarantee his independence in later years, for every purchaser of an insurance policy or depositor in a savings bank.

Self-Liquidation

It is time to have done with such talk of "self-liquidating" projects, and "expenditures outside of the budget" which will "not add to the national debt." Such phrases are meaningless words which have no application to the present proposition of the President and to believe them entitles one to the first position in the corner with a dunce cap. Expenditures made by the Federal Government are Federal expenditures and they add to the total of the Federal debt, irrespective of whether the agency drawing the check is the United States Treasury or some new alphabetical bureau which has issued bonds guaranteed by the Government.

Merely saying that such spending has nothing to do with the Federal budget does not take the expenditures out of the budget. There is no system of bookkeeping by which it can be done and if the Treasury issues a statement of the national debt and fails to include what it has guaranteed for the benefit of separate bureaus of the Government, it is lending itself to a falsification. As to whether the projects the President has in mind are "self-liquidating" remains to be seen. Certain it is that the risks are not such that banks are willing to loan on them, and the banks are bulging with funds which they wish to employ.

Siren Call

There is no use trying to fool ourselves. We have followed for six years the siren call that we can borrow and spend and become wealthy. This has never been the case since Adam and we have proved it again. But still we are urged by the President to try once more for this mirage, when it has become so apparent that the only true source of wealth is production and the only kind of wealth that can be spent is that which has been produced.

The record of the last six years has, in itself, proved that pump-priming does not produce wealth, for if it could, we should all be as rich as Croesus by now, instead of striving to carry the load for 12,000,000 who can't get work. Prosperity comes when capital goes to work, and no schoolboy would put his capital to work when he must compete with Uncle Sam, when the Govenment stands ready to take a big share of his earnings, but none of his losses, when interest rates are reduced to the vanishing point, and when we have an Administration that follows doggedly every will o' the wisp crackpot notion of finance, even when proven wrong.

The President's proposal, sprung on Congressional leaders without warning, doubtless came to them as a surprise as great as to Wall Street, and neither group should make any mistake that this is merely another pump-priming. Here is a desperate fling, a last ditch stand to stave off repudiation after six years of crazy finance.

Treasury Bonds Higher

Listed bond trading was duller than ever, today, as the financial community digested the implications of the new spending-lending program announced by President Roosevelt. The turnover was only $4,380,000, with changes irregular and mostly small. United States Treasury issues improved slightly on the assurance that the Federal program will not involve fresh issues of direct obligations. In the corporate section the main trend was downward, and most foreign dollar bonds also lost ground.

Long-term United States Government bonds advanced 1-32 to 11-32 point on exceedingly modest buying, and even smaller offerings. Guaranteed bonds of the Farm and Home Corporations also were firm, but the gains were only 1-32 and 2-32 point. Telephone bonds were steady, while best power and light issues hovered around former levels. Leading rail and industrial bonds held to former figures.

Medium-priced railroad bonds drifted slightly lower, in the quiet trading. Borderline and default rails were uncertain. Holding company bonds drifted lower, and the convertibles attracted no interest. Local traction bonds suffered another setback, but communication and amusement issues were steady.

Panama 5s remained active in the foreign department, with the price again somewhat higher. Other Latin-Americans were dull despite the large loans proposed in the latest Federal program. Best-grade foreigns and the medium-priced issues were idle.

Railway Deficit Is $71,487,000 For Four Months

Class I railroads of the United States in the first four months of 1939 had a net deficit of $71,487,000 after fixed charges, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. For the first four months of 1938, Class I roads had a net deficit of $139,004,000 after fixed charges.

Class I railroads for April, 1939, had a net deficit of $27,896,000 after fixed charges compared with a net deficit of $33,267,000 after fixed charges in April, 1938.

Railroads Add 7,111 Freight Cars In Five Months

Class I railroads in the first five months of 1939 put in service 7,111 new freight cars, the Association of American Railroads announced yesterday. In the same period last year Class I railroads put 5,786 in service.

New steam locomotives put in service in the first five months of 1939 totaled 12 compared with 105 in the same period of 1938. New electric and Diesel locomotives installed in the five months' period this year totaled 84, compared with 55 in the same period last year.

Class I railroads on June 1 had 9,261 new freight cars on order compared with 4,484 on the same day last year, and 6,391 on May 1, 1939.

New steam locomotives on order on June 1, 1939, totaled 63, compared with 56 on June 1 last year and 61 on May 1, 1939. New electric and Diesel locomotives on order on June 1 this year numbered 65 compared with six one year ago and 23 on May 1, 1939.

Advertising Called Democracy's Bulwark

New York, June 22 (AP).—The Advertising Federation of America asserted today that advertising "is a bulwark of democracy in offering consumers a free choice of a wide range of merchandise for their own selection and a defense against either monopoly or regimentation."

The federation added, in the form of a resolution: "It fosters a healthful competition between makers and distributors of meritorious goods. It is, therefore, naturally the target for all those who prefer collectivism and regimentation by political force."

Once Largest Shoe Firm Adjudicated Bankrupt

St. Louis, June 22 (AP).—The Hamilton-Brown Shoe Co., once the largest manufacturer of shoes in America, was adjudicated a bankrupt today by Federal Judge George H. Moore.

The 56-year-old concern formally went out of existence when Judge Moore signed a bankruptcy order prepared by Charles P. Williams, attorney for Federal court trustees who had operated the company since last April 18.

Grains Slump As Rains Soak The Farm Belt

Wheat, Corn, Oats and Rye All Register Near-Bottom Lows

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, June 22.—Prices of all grains slumped in the Chicago market today as sellers took cognizance of the plentiful moisture reserve being built up through much of the farm belt this month.

Corn values tumbled 1 to 1⅝ cents a bushel to below 48 cents for July delivery, the lowest these contracts have been in five years. Wheat fell ¾ to 1¼ cents to below 69 for July contracts lowest since April 25, and within 7 cents of the season's bottom. Oats and rye, which lost ⅛ to ⅞ and 1⅛ to 2 cents respectively, were within 2 to 6 cents of the season's lows.

Closing prices were at the day's lows in all pits, with July wheat at 68¾@68⅝, September 69⅝@69½, and July corn 47⅛@47¾, September 49¼@49⅜.

Cotton Climbs 15 to 65 Cents A Bale Higher

New York, June 22 (AP).—Overnight consideration of Washington legislation affecting cotton whipped up another broad buying movement for that staple today. Closing prices were up 3 to 13 points. Most traders seemed fairly well convinced the export subsidy plan for cotton has a good chance of getting on the Nation's law books.

House approval of a $225,000,000 fund for farm parity payments in addition to the regular $500,000,000 soil conservation benefit fund, came too late to affect the market.

Offerings came principally from southern spot houses, New Orleans brokers and professional accounts.

Cottonseed Oil

Cottonseed oil futures rang up new lows for the season today for all deliveries except October. Weakness in grains, particularly corn, touched off a selling movement which concentrated on July but spread through the list. Favorable crop news checked buying. Sales totaled 171 lots: July, 6.39; September, 6.62; October, 6.65 bid; December, 6.73 bid; January, 6.79.

Crude oil held steady with the Southeast at 5½ cents nominal and valley 5⅛ bid. Texas was offered at 5⅝.

Engineering Awards 21% Above Year Ago

New York, June 22 (AP).—Engineering construction awards for the week $40,543,000, were 21 per cent higher than in the corresponding 1938 week, but 27 per cent below a week ago as reported by Engineering News-Record.

This was the third consecutive week in which current totals exceeded respective 1938 figures. The current week's business brought the aggregate for the year to $1,515,324,000, which was 27.5 per cent higher than $1,187,311,000 for the first 25 weeks of 1938.

New Security Issues Decline Sharply in May

Securities effectively registered under the securities act of 1933 amounted to only $57,062,000 in May according to an analysis prepared by the trading and exchange division of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

Of this total, only $31,228,000 was proposed for sale by issuers, representing a sharp decline from the total of $235,667,000 shown for April, 1939. The comparable total for May, 1938, was $53,850,000.

In the absence of any large industrial and utility issues, such as have characterized registration during recent months, more than one-half of the securities proposed for sale by issuers during May consisted of the issues of financial and investment companies, mostly investment trusts and investment companies. The total for this group was $16,899,000, or 54.1 per cent of the total.

Electric and gas utility companies ranked second in importance with $9,789,000, or 31.3 per cent of the total. Manufacturing companies accounted for the comparatively negligible total of $2,411,000, or 7.7 per cent of the total.

In view of the large amount of investment company securities registered during May, common stocks represented the most important type of security registered with $16,173,000, or 51.8 per cent of the total.

Sears, Roebuck Sales Highest in History

Chicago, June 22 (AP).—Sears, Roebuck & Co., reported today the highest gross sales in its history for the fifth period and for the first five periods of its fiscal year. Sales for the fifth period, May 22 to June 18, totaled $53,107,759, an increase of $13,298,033 or 33.4 per cent, compared with sales of $39,809,726 for the like 1938 period. The percentage of increase was the highest for any fifth period in the company's history.

Sales for the first five periods, January 30 to June 18, totaled $232,914,875, an increase of $43,830,051, or 23.2 per cent, compared with sales of $189,084,824 for the corresponding period last year.

Downey Sees Victory for Townsend Plan

Tells 12,000 Hoosiers That Opposition in Congress Is Crumbling

By the United Press.

Indianapolis, Ind., June 22.—Adoption of the Townsend old-age pension plan would reduce "excess profits, stimulate stagnant money and restore prosperity," Senator Sheridan Downey (Democrat), of California, told 12,000 Townsendites today.

"Prosperity shall be restored in this Nation only by restoration of sufficient purchasing power to start industries working and that shall come from social dividends paid to the retired people of America," Downey said in his keynote address at the fourth annual Townsend convention.

Assails Both Parties

Downey predicted Congress soon would adopt the pension plan. Opposition to it, he said, "is crumbling before the forward march of this organization."

"The leaders in Washington are getting ready to make the Townsend brain-child their own progeny and christen it anew," he added.

Dr. Francis E. Townsend, founder and leader of the plan, predicted that the United States some day will be governed by people over 60 who received the $200 a month pension he advocates. He told the convention he "despised partyism," and attacked both Republicans and Democrats for their failure to support the Townsend movement.

When Downey completed his address, Sheriff Al Feeney, of Marion County (Indianapolis), stepped to the stage and as the delegates booed, served a court summons to force the convention to seat delegates from the suspended Covington, Ky., club.

Cadle Tabernacle was a bedlam for several minutes when various Smiths present denied relationship with Judge Harvey H. Smith, president of what officials said was a "rebellious organization," and as telegrams from officials of other Kentucky units pledging continued support were read.

Hope to Elect President

Townsend outlined his reorganization program under which each club would be governed by a board of 12 directors and an executive board of four. He predicted that the reorganization would make it possible for Townsendites "to elect a President of the United States."

"I do not look forward to the time when I shall be President," he said, "but I do look forward to the time when we shall elect one.

"I believe our most reliable talent lies under the white thatches of these people who have gained experience through the years. I look forward to the time when the elderly citizens will guide the destiny of our Nation."

Funeral Sunday For Rep. Owen In Griffin, Ga.

Funeral rites for Representative Emmett Marshall Owen, 61 (Democrat), of Georgia, who died of a heart attack Wednesday, will be held at 2 p. m. Sunday at Griffin, Ga. Burial will be in Hollonville, Ga.

Representative Owen, who was first elected to Congress in 1933, was serving his fourth consecutive term in the House from the Fourth Georgia District. A member of the House Agricultural Committee, he had served as a member of the Georgia General Assembly and had practiced law in his native Pike County for 25 years before coming to Congress.

The Representative, who lived in Griffin, Ga., was educated at Gordon Institute at Barnesville, Ga., from which he was graduated in 1900, and at the University of Georgia Law School.

Surviving him are a son, Emmett M. Owen, jr., of Jacksonville, Fla.; a daughter, Mrs. Hendley B. Floyd, of Covington, Ga., and a brother, Dr. J. C. Owen, of Griffin.

J. W. Thompson Dies at Home Here

John W. Thompson, jr., a retired plate printer for the Bureau of Engraving, died yesterday at his home, 4118 Emery place northwest.

Born in the District, Mr. Thompson had been employed by an insurance company since his retirement in 1937. He was a Mason, a member of the Fellowship Club and a member of the Plate Printers' Union.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Jeanette Thompson; two sons, John and Robert Thompson, and four daughters, Mrs. Dorothy Fox, Mrs. Helen Fuge, Mrs. Grace Hall and Miss Mildred Thompson.

Funeral services will be held tomorrow at 2 p. m. in the Eldbrooke Methodist Church. Burial will be in Cedar Hill Cemetery.

French Diplomat From Morocco Feted at Luncheon

Leon Marchal, chief of the service of commerce and industry of the French residency general in Morocco, was honored yesterday at a luncheon in the Mayflower Hotel by two Assistant Secretaries of State, George S. Messersmith and Francis B. Sayre. Left to right—Mr. Messersmith, French Ambassador Rene de Saint-Quentin, Wallace Murray, chief of the Near East division; Leon Marchal, Mr. Sayre and Jacques Truelle, counselor of the French Embassy

Leon Marchal, chief of the service of commerce and industry of the French residency general in Morocco, who is in Washington to discuss readjustments in the status of American citizens and American trade in Morocco under possible changes in old treaties, was guest of honor yesterday at a luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel. Hosts for the occasion were Assistant Secretaries of State George S. Messersmith and Francis B. Sayre.

"The United States," said M. Marchal, "signed her first treaty with French Morocco in 1836, and a second one in 1880."

M. Marchal, who arrived in New York on June 11 and then came directly to Washington, will remain here until early next week. Although his time so far has been strictly devoted to business, he plans to turn "tourist only" for the remainder of his stay in the Capital.

Others at the luncheon which took place in the Pan-American Room were the French Ambassador, Count Rene de Saint-Quentin, and the Counselor of the French Embassy, Jacques Truelle.

Those present from the State Department besides Messersmith and Sayre were Wallace S. Murray, chief of the division of Near Eastern affairs; Harry C. Hawkins, division of trade agreements; Paul H. Alling and Stanley Woodward. Also present were J. Rives Childs, Harry R. Turkel, Henry J. Wadleigh, W. Quincy Stanton, Ernest J. Dempster and John C. Ross.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The victorious Austrian team, champion of Europe, has disbanded. The players who startled the bridge world by their consistent successes, whom American players considered their first serious challengers, who developed a fine system of bidding, calling it alternately the "Stern-Austrian System" and the "Vienna System" have broken their partnerships and gone their separate ways.

The crisis that overtook their homeland forced it upon them. Of the six members who made up the team—Dr. Paul Stern, captain; Karl Schneider, D. Eduard Frischauer, Walter Herbert, Udo von Meissel and Hans Jellinek—four have gone to other lands to start life over again.

A hand on which the Culbertson team stopped at three no trump, making seven and which the Austrians bid to six diamonds picking up 650 points, is shown in today's box. Schneider and Jellinek, the slam bidders, just made their contract. The defense must have slipped to let Mrs. Sobel win 13 tricks; it is not in the cards.

The bidding by Mrs. Sobel and Vogelhofer went as follows:

Frischauer Vogelhofer	Herbert	Mrs. Sobel
South West	North	East
Pass 1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇
Pass 3 ♣	Pass	3 NT
Pass Pass	Pass

Opening lead: K ♣.

England Bid No Trump

In an earlier round during the same tournament the Austrian players picked up 600 points on one hand against England when they made a game at spades and the English played at no trump and were defeated. Here are the cards, with neither side vulnerable. East dealer:

♠ Q 10 4 2
◇ A J 4
♣ K 6 4 3 2

♠ K 7 — ♡ J 7 3 2 — ◇ 9 8 7 5 — ♣ Q J 9

♠ J 9 6 3 — ♡ A 8 4 — ◇ K Q 10 2 — ♣ A 5

The bidding, Room 1, Austria North-South:

East	South	West	North
Pass	1 ♣	Pass	2 ♣
Pass	2 ◇	Pass	2 ♠
Pass	2 NT	Pass	3 ◇
Pass	3 ♠	Pass	4 ♠
Pass	Pass	Pass

East led the king of hearts. Result: 11 tricks were made. Score: 450 points to Austria.

The bidding, Room 2, England, North-South.

East	South	West	North
Pass	1 ◇	Pass	2 ♣
Pass	2 NT	Pass	3 ◇
Pass	3 NT	Pass	Pass

West led the deuce of hearts. Although the hands contained 39 Vienna points—ample, usually, for a three no trump contract—North and South made only six tricks.

Result: 6 tricks made. Score: 100 points to Austria.

The Federal Diary

By The Diarist

SPECIAL TRAINS will puff out of Union Station tomorrow carrying a cargo of Government workers bound for "Federal Employes Day" at the Grover Whelan big-top, Gotham's biggest subway stop in Flushing, otherwise known as the World's Fair.

Speakers for the occasion are slated as Senators James M. Mead and Robert F. Wagner, of New York, and Representative Robert Ramspeck, of Georgia, chairman of the House Civil Service Committee. Still others to take part in the program are Harry B. Mitchell, president of the Civil Service Commission; Mrs. Lucille Foster McMillin, and Manhattan's bouncing Mayor, F. H. LaGuardia.

MAN OF THE DAY in the Government service is Ralph H. Chappell, who, at 68, is shaking dust from his feet as he retires from the position of superintendent of construction and maintenance at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. Alvin Hall, director of the bureau, and dozens of Chappell's associates were on hand for the gold watch presentation yesterday morning. Only Mr. Chappell didn't get a gold watch.

A few of his mementoes included a complete deep sea fishing outfit (he should be able to bait a lot of ten-foot fish stories with that one); a steamer trunk (because he plans to visit his son, who now lives in England); a portable radio, a gun and a certificate of merit signed by about 300 of his colleagues.

Mr. Chappell hasn't made up his mind yet just what he'll do, now that he's retired. He has two hobbies that ought to keep him plenty busy this summer at his place on Jackson Creek, Va. They are sea shells and stamps.

Starting out as a midshipman at Annapolis, he served in the Navy for six years. Then he went to the Procurement Division of the Treasury Department, and from there to the bureau, where he has held the same position for 33 years.

THE OFFICE of the supervising architect of the Treasury Department will do its biggest celebrating two days after July 4. July 6 marks the anniversary date (103 years) of the founding of the office, when in 1836 Andrew Jackson appointed Robert Mills as Federal architect. With Mills, the job was a single-handed proposition. At the present time, the organization which is to be transferred from the Treasury Department to the Public Works Agency has about 1,000 architects and engineers on its rolls.

Right now, the celebration, in detail, looks like a stag dinner at the Willard Hotel at which the Secretary of the Treasury, the Postmaster General and L. A. Simon, supervising architect, will have the most words to say. If the event turns out to have a ladies' entrance, Mrs. Robert Mills Evans, who lives in Georgetown, and who is the great-great-granddaughter of Robert Mills, will be at the speakers' table. In connection with the party there will be an exhibition of photos and original drawings showing the work of the division, oldest architect's office in the world.

THERE WEREN'T any newspapers in this neck of the woods when Pocahontas was kidnaped from a village called "Potomac" in the early 1600's, so a lot of folks missed the story. However, according to Dr. T. D. Stewart, of the National Museum, who is spending the summer "digging in" at this old Indian village site just below Quantico, that's what happened; and the event caused a lot of unprintable warcrys when it took place.

Curiosity, according to the proverb, is sure death to cats. For Powhatan's debutante daughter, it meant a boat ride. It seems that quite a lot of violations of the Lindbergh act were going on between Capt. John Smith's boys and the Indians. One day Pocahontas, who was visiting in "Potomac," heard that on board the pale-skins' ship anchored in the river was a nice shiny collection of copper pots. Being a thoroughly domesticated Indian maid, she decided to take a look at them.

As soon as she had slippered up the gang-plank, the skipper ordered full steam ahead and Pocahontas found herself on a conducted tour to Jamestown.

Dr. Stewart has been working on the site for a couple of years. Starting in on the 15th of this month, he expects to have all the evidence out of the ground before the summer is over. He and his assistants are camping out on the banks of Potomac Creek until the job is finished.

The late Judge William J. Graham, formerly of the Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, was the first to get the idea of bringing "Potomac" to light—purely as a warm weather hobby.

Bob Burns Says—

Instinct is a wonderful thing. Scientists claim it's the extra mind which we'll all be usin' in every day life in another hundred years or so. Of course, I reckon everybody knows just what I mean by Instinct: Instinct is that subtle somethin' which tells a woman she's always right.

But I remember one time when Aunt Pudgey's instinct sorta backfired on her. One mornin' I found Uncle Slug sittin' on his back steps, kinda smilin' to himself. I said, "What're you so happy about, Slug?"

He said, "Well, last night my wife, Pudgey, said that her instinct told her there was a burglar staggerin' into the house . . . and it was only me. Well, that's the only time in my life Pudgey was actually afraid of me."

PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

THE YEARLING

By Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

CHAPTER XVII

Penny said, "Jody, looks like you've fell heir to the old muzzle-loader. But don't git too put out now, do it fail you like it failed me."

He could not imagine being impatient about it. It was enough to have the use of it for himself. His mother had sewed the cream-colored 'coonskin into a knapsack for him. He filled it with shot and caps and wadding and filled the powder horn.

Penny said, "Ma, I been studyin'. I jest about got to go to Volusia to git me shell cases. Lem only th'owed in a few shells with the gun. And I'd love some rale coffee. I've had a bait o' them wild coffee beans."

"Me, too," she agreed. "And I need me some thread and a paper o' needles."

"Now the bucks," he said, "seems to be feedin' toward the river. I been seein' a perfect shower o' tracks headin' that-a-way. I believe me and Jody kin hunt on in that direction, and do we git us a buck or two, we kin trade the saddles and haunches to Volusia for what we need. Then we kin say 'Howdy' to Grandma Hutto."

She frowned.

"You'll git to visitin' with that sassy old woman and like as not you'll be gone a couple o' days. I think you'd ought to leave Jody with me."

JODY SQUIRMED and looked at his father.

Penny said, "We'll be back to-morrer. How's Jody to learn to hunt and be a man if his daddy don't carry him along and learn him?"

"Hit's a good excuse," she said. "Hit's jest men-folks likin' to prowl off together."

Jody laughed out. The picture of his mother's great frame pushing through the bay-heads made him shout in spite of himself.

"Oh, go on," she said, and laughed. "Git it over and done with."

"You know you enjoy gittin' shut of us now and agin," Penny told her.

Marjorie Kinnan Rawlings

"Hit's my only rest," she admitted. "Leave me Grandpa's gun loaded."

The ancient Long Tom, Jody thought, was more of a menace to her than to any intruders. She was an inaccurate and incompetent shot, and the gun was as fallible as Penny's muzzle-loader, but he could understand the comfort to her of its presence. He brought it from the shed for his father to load, grateful that she had not demanded his own newly acquired piece.

Penny whistled to old Julia and the man and boy and hound set out eastward in midmorning. The May day was warm and close. The sun beat down through the scrub. The small, hard leaves of the scrub oaks were flat pans to hold the heat. The sand burned Jody's feet through his cowhide shoes. In spite of the heat, Penny walked at a fast gait. It was all Jody could do to follow him. Julia loped ahead. There was as yet no scent. Penny stopped once and stared about the horizon.

Jody asked, "What you see, Pa?"

"Nothin', son, and very leetle o' that."

A mile east of the clearing, he changed his direction. There were suddenly deer tracks in a great plenty. Penny studied them, for size and sex and freshness.

"Here's two big ol' bucks travelin' together," he said at last. "They come this way before day."

"How kin you tell about tracks so?"

Jody could see little difference between them and some of the other hoof-marks. Penny stooped and traced them with his finger.

"Now you know to tell a doe from a buck. A doe's track is pointed and fine. And ary one kin tell how fresh a track be, for a old track has sand blowed into it. And now if you'll notice, a deer's toes is spraddled when he's runnin'. They're close together when he walks." He indicated the fresh tracks to the hound. "Here, Julia, git him!"

JULIA BENT HER long nose to the trail. It led out of the scrub, toward the southeast, into an open area of gallberry flats. Here was bear sign as well.

Jody asked, "Must I shoot a bear, do I git the chancet?"

"Bear or buck, hit's all right. Jest be sure you got a good chancet. Don't go wastin' your shot."

The flats were not hard going, but the sun was blazing. The gallberry bushes ended and there was a welcome stretch of pines. The shadows were cooling. Penny pointed out a bear gnaw. It was a clawed area on a tall pine tree, shoulder high to a man. The resin dripped from it.

"I've watched a bear at it," Penny said, "many a time. He'll stretch up and he'll claw. He'll turn his head sideways and he'll nag and gnaw. Then he'll back up and rub his shoulders agin the resin. Some folks says it's to keep the bees from stingin' when he robs a bee-tree, but I've allus figgered 'twas jest a way o' boastin'. A buck'll boast jest about the same way. He'll rub his head and horns agin a saplin' jest to prove hisself."

Julia lifted her nose and Penny and Jody stopped short. There was a commotion ahead. Penny motioned Julia to heel and they crept close. An opening showed and they halted. Twin bear cubs were high in a slim pine sapling, using it for a swing. The sapling was tall and limber and the yearling cubs were rocking it back and forth. Jody had swung in the same fashion. For an instant the cubs were not bears, but boys like himself. He would have liked to climb the sapling and rock with them. It bent half-way to the ground as they swung their weight, swayed upright again, then low on the other side. The cubs made now and then an amiable talking.

Julia could not resist barking. The cubs stopped their play, astonished, and stared down at the humans. They were not alarmed. It was their first sight of mankind and they seemed to feel, as Jody felt, only curiosity. They cocked their black furry heads from one side to the other. One scrambled to a higher limb, not for safety, but for a better view. He curled one arm around the sapling and gaped down below him. His black beady eyes were bright.

"Oh Pa," Jody begged, "let's ketch us one."

"They're a mite big for tamin'." He brought himself to his senses. "Now what ails us? Jest how long would it take your Ma to run him off, and me and you with him?"

"Pa, look at him cut his eyes."

"That's likely the mean un. Of twin bear cubs, one'll be gentle and t'other'll be mean."

"Let's ketch the gentle un. Please, Pa."

The cubs craned their necks. Penny shook his head.

"Come along, boy. Let's git on with our hunt and leave 'em to their play."

HE LINGERED BEHIND while his father took up the bucks' trail again. He thought once that the cubs were about to come down the sapling to him, but they only scrambled about from one limb to another and turned their heads to watch him. He ached to touch them. He imagined them sitting on their haunches and begging, as Oliver Hutto described trained bears as doing; nesting in his lap, warm and furry and intimate; sleeping on the foot of his bed; even under the covers with him, if the nights were cold. His father was almost out of sight under the pines. He ran after him. He looked back over his shoulder and waved his hand to the bear cubs. They lifted their black noses, as though the air might tell them, what their eyes had not, the nature of their observers. In their first sign of alarm, he saw them clamber down the sapling and slip away to the west beyond the gallberries. He caught up to his father.

"Do you ever ask your Ma into leavin' you have sich as that," Penny told him, "you belong to git one young enough to train easy."

"Now I never had nothin' much to pet nor play with, neither," Penny said. "There was sich a mess of us. Neither farmin' nor the Bible pays a man too good, and Pa was like your Ma, he jest wouldn't feed no creeturs. He done well to fill our bellies. Then he put in and died, and since I was the oldest rat in the barn, I had to look after the rest of 'em 'til they was old enough to shuffle around for theirselves."

"Yes—offen your Ma's chickens."

Jody sighed and applied himself with his father to the buck tracks. The pair of deer was keeping close together. It was odd, he thought, that the bucks could be so friendly through the spring and summer. Then when their horns were grown, and they began to run with the does in the autumn, they would drive the fawns away from the does, and battle fiercely. One buck was larger than the other.

"That un there's a buck big enough to ride," Penny said.

A patch of hammock joined the pines. Dogbane grew thickly here, lifting its yellow bells. Penny studied the multitude of tracks.

"Now boy," he said, "you been wantin' to see fawns. Me and Julia'll go on and make a circle. You climb up this here live oak and scrooch down in the branches and I believe you'll see somethin'. Hide your gun here in the bushes. You'll not want it."

To Be Continued Tomorrow.
